Now comes the sweetest season of them all—and from us comes the old, old greeting! To all our Friends across the nation—MERRY CHRISTMAS and God Bless!

Very large elaborate brass Eagle Knocker that is over 8" tall. Beautifully worked eagle spread wings, and extremely delicate knocker. Complete with original attachments. Price—$39.00 And speaking of Eagles—a handsome pair of New England "snow birds"—Eagles—and beauties! These are iron & would make stunning hood ornaments. There is a slot of iron attached to each bird which slipped under the shingles and kept the snow from falling off the roof too fast. Spread wings nearly 9" heads in profile. Very good and very old. Price—$14.00

Early and unusual iron utensil for holding fire-place equipment. Has big flat feet and a large brass urn shaped finial on top and a "T" arm on which there are hooks to hold shovel, tongs and poker. It's graceful and unusual and a real antique. Price—$12.00

Beautiful big maple slat-back rocker with splat seat a great "rake" and tremendous style! The back is 27" above the seat and has 5 slats and it flares at the top and the seat widens toward the front. It's strictly "of the period" and will lend character anywhere! The seat is a renaissance piece. Price—$34.00

One of the finest old copper tea kettles in a year! Holds 4 qts., very high, important and delicately shaped spout. It's all copper and heavy and it flares at the shoulders. Handsome! In perfect shined up condition. Price—$23.00

Pair of beautiful old Mallard duck decoys in stunning colors and original paint and condition. These are very early with glass eyes, colorful paint and show but a very small amount of wear. They are inexpressively decorative. Would make perfect lamp bases, they are all hand made and really lovely. Price—$18.00

it and it revolves. These were the last word in elegance 1790-1820. These are handsome ornaments today, but almost never are they found in working condition. This is for the man who is a collector. It's a museum piece. Price—$42.00

A dark little pine tilt table that measures 20" across and stands on cute tripod legs. The upright is pencil post octagon, rare and early and it's in perfect condition and all original. Price—$38.00

Pair of very handsome, heavy, and very old brass candlesticks. These are 10 inches tall, have octagon bases, and the original old large "pushers". They are beautifully shaped and have their own bobeches. Price—$18.50

An 8 drawer spice cabinet, oak, as taken from the wall of a 200-year-old Vermont country house by my own hands. It's in the old red every splinter of it original. It's 18" tall to the top shelf, has 4 even sized drawers on each side the original tiny wood pulls. It measures 10" across the front, and is 5" deep. The back is beautifully shaped and rises 4" at the center from the top shelf, and it has a hole for hanging. It's certainly the cutest piece. Price—$17.50

Beautiful old pine knife box for serving snacks or for planting or just for holding silverware, as it was made to do. It's all been finished, and it's very decorative and lovely. Measures 12¾" l. and 9" wide. It flares and has an interesting high center handle. Price—$9.00

Currier & Ives child's push sleigh! Remember "Central Park in Winter"? Here it is in all its quaint beauty—for piling with presents under the tree or taking that precious little "bundle" out for a sleigh ride later. Curved back shaped, cut handles and high curved dash board. Its painted lip stick red and green, and the high hooped up runners are black. It's a darling and to find it we traveled hundreds of miles last summer; Price—$32.00

We wish the happiest holiday — a Christmas truly merry!

"The Treasure Chest"
Coventry Centre, R. I.
"Filled from Rhode Island and Connecticut Attics!"

TEL. Co. 1-3310

Since this is the end of the SILVER ANNIVERSARY year of 1956 for HOBBIES, we offer the following gift-giving suggestions. Anniversary priced, as our Christmas gift to you. And for your convenience, so that you won't have to take your valuable time to compose a letter, we are trying a new idea as you will see at the end of our advertisement. Just cut out the little order blank which has spaces for the numbers of the articles, enclose your check for the total amount, put them into an envelope, and drop it into a mail-box. So easy, and better still,

- I found this umber-rubbed plaster MADONNA, dated 1933, just in time for your Yule-tide decorating. Finely cast, it is 17 1/2" tall; 10 1/4" across base which has relief "MATER PURISSIMA". Un-important flake on side $4.75
- Walnut, double-rod TOWEL RACK. 18 1/2" x 15 1/2" overall. 17 1/2" x 5 1/2" glass over dark rose material, silk-embroidered with cross. Water stained, but I believe washable. Wood-work fine with leaf and scroll carving at top. $7.50
- Plunger type BUTTER MOULD. 5" tall, 3 3/4" diam. with acorn-like design. $3.00
- Early one-piece-printer type, BUTTER STAMP. 6 1/4" L. Fern-like flower design. $3.50
- A set of six, 6 3/4" diam. scalloped, gold rimmed edges, saucers; with matching 4 3/4" diam. 2" deep, BOULLION CUPS; double gold edges. Perfect. Beautiful BLACK KNIGHT. Selb Bavaria, china Design is of many colored flowers on a cream colored band $28.00

- These six demi-tasse cups and saucers match the above BLACK KNIGHT china, and are also perfect $15.00
- Is as handsome an item in SATIN GLASS as you will ever find, BUT, one corner and base of thin 3 1/2" tall, 2 1/2" square INK-WELL has been damaged. Brass collared. Disty swirl cover is electric blue, shaded to a pale blue, to white base. Deep swirl pattern. As is $9.00
- A lady-like desk accessory in silver-plate by E. G. Webster & Son. Perfect condition. Has clear, cut-crystal ink-well, with floral repoussé cover. 4" tall, scroll pen-rack has pierced VIOLETS design, and there are all-over deep embossed flowers on the 6" footed tray. $9.00
- A cunning little lantern shaped, solid brass ink-well, 4" tall. Not polished. $3.00
- and 11. are Parisian Grained Engand. Thomas Elmslie & Son. Incised P.G. Pattern of interesting birds in shaded grey. The compote is 4" tall, 9" diam. and has an old flake on the very bottom. The pickle, or celery, dish is 10x5". Yellowed, but OLD! The two for $7.50
- Another of the old CANDY STORE SCALES. 12" long. Iron with tin scoop. Still has a portion of its old label and worn red paint. $6.50
- These 8" tall candlesticks are a luscious shade of lavender, with crystal, 5 3/4" diam. cut-crystal border bases, with a flower and leaf design also cut into the colored portion of the base. Perhaps only 30 yrs. old, but don't you wish you were? $8.50
- And here's somebody only 37 years old, "shipped in 1919". But it wouldn't be Christmas without just one doll, would it? HE WAS a soldier, as I can prove by his worn clothes that are now at the cleaners; and the bullet holes in his head show that he saw combat duty. BUT, in spite of that, and having only one hand; the rest of him is fine, and he WALKS as well as ever on his spring-hinged wooden legs and feet. 27" tall $18.00
- Heavy, heavy, and brilliant, CUT GLASS 8" T. pitcher with four matching tumblers. Serrated diamond within hexagon, and sun-burst design. Proof $22.00
- Also in time for Christmas decorating, this lovely MAJOLICA piece. Incised numbers 9908 and 70, 13" from one Lady's head to the other; and 8 1/2" from the tops of their heads. (By the way, one's head has been off and on again, but who hasn't lost their head at sometime or other?) It's the only imperfection Pierced collar is moss green, to many shades of green, and aqua; with touches of rose. Lined with robin's egg blue $18.00
- and 18. are pieces of OLD BEADED GRAPE. No. 17 is a rare size compote, 5" T., 6 1/4" diam. Proof $12.00. No. 18 is the 7 1/4" diam. 1 1/2" and has tiniest flake under the edge at one beaded corner. $5.00
- Beautifully carved, wainscot corner brackets, 14" x 14", 14 1/2" tall, top shelf 11" sides and is 15 1/2" across. The handsome antlered DEER'S head ornament is 10 1/2" overall. Really a fine example. For that MAN'S room $17.50
- 21, 22 and 23, are silver TEA STRAINERS. No. 20 is Sterling silver, 6" L and has a hand-pierced handle with basket strainer. $4.75. No. 21 is a dainty little round Sterling bowl one that hangs from the tea-pot spout. Hand-engraved, repoussé leaf designs. $3.50. No. 22 is E.P.N.S. silver, by R. A. Miller. Has pierced handle, and an applied enamelled emblem with Crown and Flag, "R.M.S. Samarita", $4.75. No. 23 Sterling. Squarish, with oval repoussé, and feathered piercings. To fit your pony type. $3.75
- Milk-white BLACKBERRY. 5" bowl base no cover. Guaranteed old and perfect $1.00
- Sone-ware covered jar, 5" tall. Shaded brown to cream, with raised designs in the Royal Doulton manner, but no markings. One wind-mill arm tip has been long gone. $6.00
- Covered sugar bowl and cream pitcher in the thin-set of chins; twirly, applied handles, and scroll cover final. Wind-mills and canal scenes, blue on white. Pitcher lip has underside roughness. Blue underglaze "DELFT". Germany, Urn, Cross & Crown." And green "R. C. Cross & Crown, Versailles." The set $14.00
- 9 1/2" diam. tray with porcelain bottom painted with conventional designs in shades of blue and rust. Pierced metal galleries. Six matching coasters, "German". $7.50
- A marvelous item in BLOWN GLASS. This 12" tall; including three (one is missing) cunn. solid glass, two-mold flame stoppers: DEMI-CANTER, is divided into four sections that pour separately from one neck. Sections have etched "RHUM", "BRANDY", "WHISKY", "GIN". And I can too spell! A silver chain and disc encircles the bottle, inscribed "J. D. Hooper", but HE don't have to be named Hooper to enjoy it. $16.00
- This isn't as heavy, but a nice early blown-glass decanter with applied handle; 12 1/2" to the large blown "tear-drop" stopper. Gold banding, leaves, and curlicue designs; with white enamelled petals. Base and stopper are numbered 13. Perfect $9.50
- Got a boy who doesn't want any sissy lamps in his room? This pair of metal CAVALIERS are 23" T., including lamp harps. Were converted to electricity a long time ago, and now need re-wiring, and new shades. Original no. Hump-back, 18th century. $16.00
- 10 1/2" diam. round wooden top FOOT-STOOL stands 5 3/4" tall on curved, embossed iron legs. Get out your needle-point, and make a $7.50
- 10 1/2" tall, clear glass CRUCIFIX candlesticks, OLD ones. Each has what may, or may not, be a mold imperfection on its candle-cup. The pair. $9.75
- Here's a chance to buy gifts for four different people at the same time! GUTTA PERCHA DAGUERREOTYPES. Each a conventional design, with cases and interiors in practically pristine condition. The largest is 6x4", and has a frame of four pinned inside. Next is 3 3/4x3 1/4", and has embossed corners on corner. Gentleman's picture. Next is 3x2 1/2", and the smallest is 2 1/2x2". The group for $16.00
34. and 35. are identical, 2 1/4" T. cups, with 4 1/2" D. saucers. Except that 34 is blue on white, and 35. is on white. Fine china with wide gold rims. No maker's mark. Design on the cups are of the "GASPER" Ship, and wording "First Blow For Freedom", "June 19th, 1772". On the saucers are the Rhode Island State Seal and Motto, "First National Centennial Anniversary, 1876". Each $4.50
- Another nice antique bread cabinet: 25x16x2" tall. Four drawers have pretty carvings on the fronts and the sides have faint-like carvings. One loop pull missing from its brass plate on one of the four drawers, and the three boards top has spread apart a bit. Also needs re-finishing. $14.00
- Most unusual Bill, or Paper Clip. Can be hung, or used flat. Heavy, solid brass, moulded WILD BOAR'S HEAD with an ear of corn in its mouth, in natural colors. Old. 5 1/2x1 1/2" $5.50
- Pair of carved criss-cross frames with applied leaves corners. Good gold liners. 14x12" overall. Pictures are genuine, old, colorful FASHION PRINTS. $6.00
- If you want "Period" accessories, this is a wonderful ADAMS style looking-glass. The mirror is 35 1/2x24", and usable. It is placed on a painted grey background section of paneling that measures overall, 49x22 3/4". There are gold-leaved mouldings across the top and down the sides enclosing applied carved rosettes, and center motif is carved in the Adams manner: Lyre, Tambourine, etc. with detailed basket of flowers. One tip of the Lyre is missing. The gold-leaved mirror frame is nicked just slightly at the corners. There are many applied CORNUCOPIAS with fruit and flowers, and scrolls, all around the frame and flowers, and scrolls, all around the frame

- border; complete and intact. Foundation red shows a bit, but the old gold is lovely and I would clean only $65.00
40. Seventy-two years ago this hat with attached PARADE TORCH LIGHT was worn during the 1884 Political Campaign; when Blaine and Logan were the Republican Nominees for President and Vice President. Good condition $9.50
41. 21" tall oil lamp wires for three lights, but needs new cord. Solid, very heavy brass base with fluted, beaded column; and three-leaf clover band in relief around base. Not too old, but practical. 13½" diam. umbrella shade is milk-white art glass in four sections. $12.00
42. This is an OLD oval 6½" to the brass collar top. Heavy BLOWN glass, fused in three sections; irregular glob base, solid glass stem, and now! $7.50
43. What is it? Bet you DON'T know. A brass EAR TRUMPET. The better to hear you with, and don't RARE as these teeth are $12.00
44. Rat-tail Coppering at this early wooden wash-tub; 19" diam., 8½" deep; with 11½" tall ear handles. Holds water too. Just clean and re-finish $15.00
45. Oval leafed frame, 24½x18½". Opening, with convex glass, 19½" x 13½". Applied, deep cut scroll-leaf medallions, and tiny hearts border. Gold-leaf useable as is. Would make a lovely mirror $5.00
46. Not much of a picture, but this is an ARA-BIAN SAFE," iron still bank; 4½" tall. Embossed sides depict Desert scenes. Mosque, camels, etc. $15.00
47. BELL, 4" tall, Austrian China, complete with original ceramic clapper. Typical shaded cream to deep yellow background with bright painted flowers. Back reads "Compliments of Lion d'or, 59-61 W. 24th St. N. Y." $6.50
48. BANK, 5½" tall. Darling little Pumpkin, scarecrow man. BENNINGTON-like deep yellow pottery. Base is incised 1549. Perfect except for one tiny nick at the money slot on the back. RARE. $8.75
49. and 50. are each the 9¼" diam. plates incised WEDGWOOD, of 1899. 49. Is "The Old Stone Mill, Newport," and perfect $4.00
50. picture "Landing of The Pilgrims, Plymouth." Hair-line crack in rim. $4.50
51. WOOD UMBRELLA STAND, 27½" tall. Pretty, curvy shelves, turn knobs, and button feet. Has removable embossed iron bowl on lower shelf. Just polish $18.00
52. DINNER GONG (I assume), U.S. Patent. Plant & Perry. Sole Licensee, W. A. Needham. Six graduated embossed brass gongs; largest is 10" diam. smallest, 3½"; topped with brass, musical note — engraved plates. Ebony wood frame is 23½" long, by 12½" widest side. Panel stripes are carved with wheel-like designs. Stand is 33" to the top of its seven posts. No name $43.00
53. This 12" TERRESTRIAL GLOBE, in its 14" metal frame, once hung in a country one-room school; long since abandoned. Complete with pulleys and iron ball weight. $15.00
54. 2½" carved-bone novelty that unscrews in the middle to reveal the little ¾" THIMBLE which is also carved bone. Tiny end knob is nicked. $6.00
55. 5" PIE CRIMPER, with fluted IVORY d.s. and wooden handle $4.75
56. SHIP'S COMPASS, made by Wilcox, Crittenton & Co. Middletown, Conn. Mahogany box 8½" square, enclosed secured and balanced compass $35.00
57. ALL HE wants for Christmas may be these three teeth. The largest, 5½", is labelled "Shark Tooth." The pair of 4½" ones won't tell. All for $9.00
58. Beautifully modeled SETTER DOG, 13½" from stem to stern, stands 7¾" tall. Heavy cast brass, or bronze (I can't decide), signed "T. Moignier." $14.00
59. Intriguing old SHIP MODEL, but I honestly don't know its age. According to the dust there - on it could be a million. To my non-nautical eye it looks like though a lot of time and elaborate work had gone into its construction long time ago. It is 30" to the top of the British flag it flies and 32½" at its longest. Wooden plate decrees it to be the "FALCON", and it has a bird figure-head. 45.00
- Original photos are 20c each, and don't forget, we'll pack anything, and everything, for free; but all shipping is extra. No C.O.D.'s. Please include extra for parcel post, and we will refund any balance due you immediately. Or, packages may be sent express, collect for the transportation.

LETTERS—From the HOBBIES Family—At Home And Abroad

Young New Yorker Writes of Collectables in Mexico

Puebla, Pue., Mexico.
Dear Friends:

Two days ago it was Xmas in October for me. Copies of my favorite magazine, HOBBIES, arrived with the Spanish speaking mail man. I put aside all my other work and proceeded to consume mentally each one, going over every advertisement and enjoying every article. It was always a big day when the magazine would arrive in New York, but here in Mexico, where good American magazines are few and far between, it became a National Holiday when three arrived together. I thank you very much.

The Senora Vivanco, whom I am presently boarding with here in Puebla, is the Directress of the Museo Bello. This is a private home that was turned over to the state of Puebla by one Señor Jose Bello. It is three floors, crammed full of valuable art objects that Sr. Bello managed to collect in a life time of searching. There is everything there from early Aztec pottery to a ruby and diamond encrusted crucifix and a stained glass window from a palace in France. Everything is in perfect condition and beautifully displayed. The amazing thing about the collection, at least to me, is the fact that Sr. Bello NEVER left the city of Puebla! Everything in the museum first found its way to this inland Mexican town and then Sr. Bello purchased it. You look at the objects and wonder just how a Belgian tapestry or a priceless Chinese junk carved of pure ivory ever managed to get to Mexico, and why Sr. Bello was a collector of many things and I believe the readers of HOBBIES would be interested in his story, as they are interested in collectors everywhere. If you like, when I return to the United States, I will write an article on him and his Museum.

By the way, I showed your magazine to Sra. Vivanco and she intends to subscribe for copies for the Museo Bello. She was very impressed, saying that this magazine could probably be of more use to her than all the art books, she has amassed over the period of six years that she has been Directress.

I have found the antique business here in Mexico to be thriving. Even the poorest of homes manage to have something that is valuable in the way of an antique. Many houses are decorated in the Spanish style with furniture and glassware that came from Spain two or three hundred years ago. Shops are full of religious antiques such as crosses and oil paintings and silver altar objects. There is a great reverence for the past here, but also Mexico is a nation that is looking to the future.

I will be leaving Mexico on November 5, going to see the ruins in the Yucatan and then on to British Honduras, Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras, Nicaragua, Costa Rica and Panama. I plan to stay in Panama for a few weeks, catching my breath and catching up on my writing assignment for a travel edition. Then on to South America.

I'll drop you a note from the various countries as I go along and will write a letter when I reach Panama.

Thanks for mentioning me in the Visitors news in the October issue. It made me feel very proud to see my name in HOBBIES.

Sincerely,
David St. Clair

Knows His Lincoln

Atlanta, Ga.—Dear Sir:

Referring to page 118 of the October issue of your magazine Margaret Fuller quotes something that she did not originate.

The correct words, as used by Abraham Lincoln, (see Nida, History of the People of Illinois) are the following: "Die when I may. I want it said of me by those who knew me best, that I always planted a flower, and picked a thistle, where I thought a flower would grow"—A. L.

—G. G. Krause

Dear Mr. Krause: Please don't blame Maggle, blame us, as it was HOBBIES error.

Distaff Side Interested In Political Items

Mentor, Ohio.
Dear Friends:

In your July issue on page 60, you printed a photograph of an unusual flag. I believe this to have been an early political items.

The slogan "Protection To Home Industries" was made most popular by McKinley, but I have a Blaine handkerchief with the same words. It could have been coined after the War of 1812 when the Jefferson Republicans supported a protective policy for American manufacturing. The earliest mention of tariff as a campaign issue that I have found is in 1820, the second election of James Monroe.

The United States flag was used for political campaign banners. I have seen an 1840 flag with a log cabin, an 1844 with clay and Frelinghuysen on it, and have one with Fremont's picture on it. This has only 13 stars on it, so that the number on Dr. Clark's flag would have no connection with the date of the flag. I would certainly be interested to know if Dr. Clark has an authentic date for the flag. Before 1812 does seem very early to me.

From Somewhere in Europe

New York City

Dear "Hobbies":

I wish there was some way to tell the average collector, who might be contemplating a trip to Europe for the first time, of the various smoothly worked pitfalls of buying antiques in Europe.

In a very small way, I have acquired a fair, and I say only fair knowledge of European antiques, absorbing all I can glean from Museum Directors, experts on 11th through 14th Century furniture, my self—acquired knowledge of being fortunate in going into the German homes, and buying direct . . . seeing ancient pieces NOT for sale, but gaining knowledge of their history. Of using constantly all books I can buy on European pottery, etc., plus seeing these articles intact, in the various castles in Germany and France.

I would like to say that the first impression a "tourist" gets upon entering a German antique shop . . . is the seemingly low prices . . . bearing in mind that four marks equal $0.95 American. A great number of furniture pieces, passed vaguely off as "Biedermier" are done so, by a few dealers, because they have insufficient knowledge to accurately define the period.

To a large extent, ornate pieces are passed off as Baroque, without a definition as to period.

Over here, Biedermier, resembles the Victorian styling of the 1880's in the States. Although the earlier German Empire pieces are also passed as Biedermier, if you can spot these "sleepers" so posed, you can pick up a few choice items. Recently, I bought a black lacquered double top card table, passed to me as Biedermier. It was Louis XVI, no doubt from every indication and no more Biedermier than you or I.

Another pitfall is buying old items pitted with worm holes. In all cases (Continued on page 62)

- Tristan und Isolde: Two fragments, Liebestod (Act 3) Nordica (Hertz) 1/7/03 and 2/9/03.

If IRCC L-7006 was a huge success, L-7004 will undoubtedly be a smash hit! Not that the choice of selections has anything to do with this, but the reproduction of the old worn-out cylinders, recorded by Lionel Mapleson backstage of the Metropolitan at the turn of the century, is so much improved that even Jean de Reszke's items (the noisiest of the lot) afford easy listening and his voice is heard now quite distinctly.

IRCC L-7004, a 12-inch disc, is a veritable mint of fabled voices in operatic selections most of which they never recorded on commercial discs. Moreover, some of them—Jean de Reszke, Bridewell, de Marchi, Breval, Anthes—are not found on any records whatever, therefore it appears as if the IRCC will be the only means through which we will ever be able to know them at all.

Side 1, Bands 1, 2, 3 and 4—This group gives on LP the voice of the man who shattered one of Caruso's fondest dreams — Emilio de Marchi. Even though Puccini wanted Caruso to be his first Cavaradossi, Haricles Darclee (chosen for the part of Tosca) insisted on having her favorite, de Marchi, for the role. The primadonna got her wish, and here is the tenor in the part he created at the Costanzi of Rome, in 1900.

It is most interesting to hear de Marchi clearly for the first time. (On IRCC old 78 r.p.m. discs, like all the rest, he suffers in comparison.) His is a good, solid voice, wide and closely impacted against the resonators; and with a masculine appeal that renders it particularly attractive. He, Scotti and Eames (yes, she too!) do some emoting on these four bands, which, if you respond to vocal acting, will surely set your spine a-tintling.

Side 1, Band 5—Three fragments from "Cavalleria," and de Marchi again, in more of the impassioned singing which becomes him so well—this time with Calve, Bridewell and Campanari as companions. A new voice, that of Bridewell, impresses at once with its charm, but her musicianship does not wholly satisfy, as she turns plain eights into triplets in Lola's ditty. De Marchi, too, shows he is no complete master of the staff when he lands on the high A ahead of Calve in the assieme passage preceding Lola's entrance. But the French soprano, in true feminine fashion, ignores the tenor's hurry and determinedly follows both the score and the orchestra.

Side 1, Band 6—Finally Jean de Reszke's voice—an exceptional voice, exciting in its opalescent beauty, unforced and most skillfully managed; and with a clever falsetto admixture in the extreme top to facilitate its emission. His immaculate phrasing and faultless musicianship contribute, of course, in no small measure to his superior artistry, which blends with that of Nordica in the difficult "Huguenots" duet.

Side 1, Bands 7, 8, 9 and 10—Wagner is certainly well represented on these four bands. First, Nordica is again on hand to prove that her renown as an outstanding Brunnhilde is well deserved, with fourteen bars of Hojotoho and in the noble finale of the "Siegfried" last act duet with the heroic Georg Anthes. The incomparable Gadski is then heard in a fragment from the "Lohengrin" Act 2 duet with the Viennese dramatic soprano Luisa Reuss-Belice, who was capable of singing lower parts also, such as that of Ortrud in which she here displays her exceptional ability. Side 1 closes with the stirring last scene from "Die Meistersinger," with Anthes' long held final high C rising above the ensemble.

EMILIO DE MARCHI as Mario Cavaradossi

CARRIE BRIDEWELL as Amneris

Side II, Band 1—Befittingly, another ensemble opens the second side—the imposing "Aida" Concertato with stars of the first magnitude in the cast; Gadski, Homer, de Marchi, Journett and Muhlmann.

Side II, Bands 2, 3 and 4—Melba's exquisite tones, pure like a touch of silver against china, soar in Spargi d'amaro piano, and the audience applauds after its completion, as will everyone who hears this thrilling last part of the "Lucia" Mad Scene and her equally splendid rendition of the extracts from the Jewel Song, and Alleluia from "Le Cid."

Side II, Band 5—Sembrich's Queen of the Night! We read about it, dreamed of it, but never expected to hear it. But here it is—brilliant and musically perfect to the last inserted D above the staff, and with all the triplets and picchettati faultless in form and pitch. Incidentally, this performance of "Die Zauberflöte" on January 27, 1902, was one of the most fabulous at the Metropolitan, for in this million-dollar production took part; Sembrich (Queen of the Night), Ternina, Homer and Bridewell (Ladies), Scheff (Papagena), Eames (Pamina), Dippel (Tamino), Campanari (Papageno) Muhlmann, Vanni (Priests) and Edouard de Reszke (Sarastro).

Side II, Band 6—Jean de Reszke sings again—in fragments from Vasco's Grand Air, and Act 4 duet with the magnificent Lucienne Breval; and to say that he is superb is to put it mildly. An ovation—well merited on all points—greets the tenor at the end of his solo.

Side II, Bands 7 and 8—More Wagner; on the penultimate band with a star-studded female octet giving as exciting a Ride of the Valkyries as could be expected; and on the closing band Nordica once more, in two fragments from Liebestod. Recorded at different dates (Jan. 7, 1903 and Feb. 9, 1903), these two extracts overlap quite a bit. In fact, the second recording begins six measures and ends eleven measures after the first.

NEW BOOKS

RECORD RATINGS. The Music Library Association's Index of Record Reviews; compiled by Kurtz Myers, Chief of the Music and Drama Department, Detroit Public Library; edited by Richard S. Hill, Head of the Reference Section, Music Division, Library of Congress. Published by Crown Publishers, Inc., 419 Fourth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y. Price $5.95.

An enlightening and useful book dealing with LP discs, including those containing reproductions of earlier recordings, has made its welcome appearance. This large 440 page volume aside from giving an extensive listing of records—vocal, instrumental and spoken—with their respective labels and prices, also introduces an innovation which is as worth-while as it is interesting. The new feature consists of references to past reviews which have appeared during the last 25 years in the leading publications of the United States, England and France. Thus, at a glance, one gets an idea of a disc's various evaluations by examining the symbols affixed after its contents; a cross standing for excellent, a dot for adequate, a dash for inadequate and a square for no clear-cut opinion. An added m.f. sign means that the critic has found some mechanical fault with that particular recording. And should anyone desire to look up any of the reviews, for that purpose the initials of the publications in which they appeared are marked, as well as the dates and page numbers.

In a thoroughly detailed Preface and Summary, every information is supplied as to the raison d'être of RECORD RATINGS and how it works. Moreover, a scanning of a methodically arranged Table of Contents quickly leads the way to the volume's many departments, which include every phase of Classical Music both vocal and instrumental: Band Music; Diction (Documentary, Drama Poetry, Prose, Religious, etc.); Folk, Ethnographical and Traditional Music (U. S., Canada, Latin America and West Indies, Europe—British Isles and Continent, Africa, Asia etc.); Historical Reissues, and a Performer Index (Organizations, Conductors, Vocalists, Instrumentalists, Diction Performers) in which among a plethora of illustrious names flash those of Anthes, Breval, Jean de Reszke, Saleza and Salignac—all found exclusively on IRCC labels.

The symbols are absent in Historical Reissues, and the reason given in the foreword to this section is; "Because the critical principles which reviewers apply to these historical mementos differ from those they bring to bear on contemporary recordings and performances, it has proven impractical to include the usual symbols in the following listing." However, I did find a symbol alongside the reference to my review of the Mapleson L-7006 (June 1955 HOBBIES)—a symbol which I had not come across in the book before: two crosses, one over the other. Surprised, I investigated the reason for this "double-crossing" and was gratified to find a note in the Summary which explained that: "To indicate reviews which contain unusually valuable background information, another symbol (cross-over-cross) has been used." What puzzles me, though, is that my review of the Muzio Esoteric 508 (November 1952 HOBBIES) bears the mark m.f. Mechanical fault? Hardly so. All I planned in that review was the faulty pitch (every recording one full tone too high), and, surely, rather than a mechanical fault, sloppy pitching is a musical offence. The symbol m.f. by the way, is fully described in the book as follows: "Where the reviewer has given a specific warning about a mechanical fault in the disc, the abbreviation (m.f.) is added at the end of the citation. English reviewers are more prone to report such faults, and naturally they are usually discussing an altogether different pressing. Other variables may also be present—the reviewer may be working from a test pressing, he may be using unusual playback equipment, and copy-to-copy variations are by no means unknown—and thus a single (m.f.) need not be taken too seriously, whereas three or four, reported by a variety of reviewers, surely are." Well now—I worked from an original commercial LP pressing on my usual playback which revolves at exactly 33 1/3 r.p.m.

and yet, out of five reviews mentioned it seems I was the only one to report the incorrect pitch. Why? Simply because before, the great majority of record reviewers were even less concerned about the pitch of LP recordings than they are now; and thus, aside from my own vigorous kicking, very little complaining was done or that score. I'm well aware of the fact that I get in the hair of those who do not deem it important enough to reproduce old records at the speed they were originally made. But it matters not; and as long as I can help bring about greater pitch accuracy in the transcription of early discs (as it has lately been noticed), I certainly will not cease to express myself frankly on the matter.

But coming back to the book—RECORD RATINGS is an all-around fine and valuable guide for a record lover; and, besides, it affords fascinating reading, proving once again how widely opinions can diverge about the same subject.

The "Index to Artists" of VOICES OF THE PAST, by John R. Bennett, and Part 3 of this work, have now been released. These two new books, as well as the previous Parts 1 and 2, may be acquired for 80¢ each from The Oakwood Press, Bucklands, Tandridge Lane, Lingfield, Surrey, England.

Part 3 continues in numerical sequence with recordings—classical and popular—issued in England: on 10" and 7" G & T, 10" and 12" Pre-Dog and Dog Labels (3285 to 04807), and Miscellaneous (B298 to B459).

Among the lot—which includes the English numbers of many of our own American made recordings—are found the more common items, as well as those of major historical importance and interest.

The Index to Artists lists the names of all performers who have so far appeared in Parts 1, 2 and 3; and will follow in Parts 4 and 5, until Volume I of the English Catalogue is completed.

THE NEW YORK GRAMOPHONE SOCIETY

Reports reach this department of the advancement and progress made by the NYGS since its inception. An interesting addition to their activities is the publication of a bulletin, "Collectors' Item," to be distributed among its members. Volume I, No. I of this private publication deals with recordings from Adriana Lecourre, L'Africaine, Aida, Andrea Chenier, Ariadne auf Naxos, Armide, Un Ballo in Maschera, Il Barbiere di Siviglia and La Boheme.

As promised, famous artists will occasionally appear in person at the Club's meetings. On January 23rd it will be Mme. Margarete Matzenauer. Other personalities prominent in the musical world are also expected to be present that evening. A committee consisting of Albert Wolf, Eli Winer, Richard Porter and Henry Mecinski has been appointed to arrange the program.

Robert J. Nathan, 5480 Broadway, New York 63, N. Y., is the secretary of The New York Gramophone Society.

Merry Christmas and A Happy New Year to all Friends and Readers of this department.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

Mary Jordan

By JIM WALSH

IV Mary Jordan's Records

In view of her admitted artistry, it is a pity that only one of Mary Jordan's records - "My Heart At Thy Sweet Voice" - can be considered to give a fairly adequate idea of the gorgeous opulence of her contralto tones. Looking back, it is hard to find any reason why the Edison company, apparently the only one for which she ever made records, used this luscious voice almost entirely in ensemble work. Not all the fingers of one hand are required to enumerate her solo cylinders and her duets also were few. And why, as far as I can determine, did she never sing for the Diamond Discs? Her name doesn't appear in any disc record catalog that I have examined, although there is a chance, of course, that her voice is heard in some of the choral groups.

Research indicates the first mention of Mary Jordan's name in phonograph publicity occurs in the Edison cylinder record list for March, 1911. The front cover shows a photo of the Metropolitan Quartet, which must be one of the most unusual pictures ever taken. The four artists are lined up in profile and snapped from an angle that makes it hard to tell the women from the men. Page 2 contains this descriptive sketch:

METROPOLITAN QUARTET — The exquisite Barcarole from Offenbach's "Tales of Hoffmann," appearing in the March list of Amberol Records, is a striking example of the lovely harmony which results from the blending of voices whose natural beauty has been enhanced by careful, intelligent cultivation. Each member of this well-known organization is an artist of the very highest calibre, with an enviable and far from local reputation. All have appeared at various times upon the concert platform in this country and Canada, and all are soloists of prominence in the church circles of New York and vicinity.

Their previous contributions to the Amberol catalog are No. 28, "Quartet From Rigoletto"; No. 131, "Come Where the Lilies Bloom"; No. 338, "Flow Gently, Sweet Afton"; and No. 352, "Juanita."

The members of the Quartet are: Edith Chapman, soprano; Mary Jordan, contralto; Harry Anthony, tenor; and James F. Harrison, bass.

Edith Chapman was better known in concert circles by her married name of Edith Chapman Goold. "Harry Anthony" was really John Young, and "James F. Harrison" (a baritone, rather than bass) was Frederick J. Wheeler. His death was announced in the issue of HOBBIES that carried the photo of Miss Jordan and Wheeler among the singers of the Lucia Sextet.

And now I must mention an oddity. The March, 1911, issue of Edison's little "fan magazine," The New Phonogram, also contained a write-up of the Barcarole record. It concluded: "The members of the Metropolitan Quartet, each of whom has won an enviable reputation on the concert platform, are: Florence Hinkle, soprano; Margaret Keys (Sic!), contralto; Harry Anthony, tenor, and James F. Harrison, bass. Apparently the Phonogram writer had confused the personnel of the Edison Mixed Quartet with that of the Metropolitan. When the two ensembles were formed the Mixed Quartet was ordinarily used for recording church music and the Metropolitan for secular songs. After the Diamond Discs began to appear the Edison Mixed Quartet name was dropped, and the Metropolitan sang both sacred and secular music. The Metropolitan soon ceased to have a permanent personnel. Any four singers whose voices blended harmoniously and who were available for a recording date appeared for the occasion as the Metropolitan Quartet.

Because of this shifting personnel, it would be wasted effort to discuss in detail all the Metropolitan Quartet recordings of the late wax Amberol and early Blue Amberol periods. Instead we move up a month and come to the first duet record in which Mary Jordan's name is given as one of the singers—the familiar "Home To Our Mountains" from "Trovatore." This was four-minute Amberol No. 652. After a description of the action leading up to this number in the opera, the New Phonogram said: "Miss Jordan and Mr. Anthony have given us an interpretation . . . that vocally and dramatically is beyond criticism."

In September, 1911, Miss Jordan took part in a two-minute version of "Every Little Movement," from "Madame Sherry." The contralto sang with an Australian young lady, Marie Narelle, whose voice was considered around 1906 to be the only soprano that reproduced with undistorted naturalness. The monthly supplement said: "The big song hit of 'Madame Sherry,' and one which seems destined to enjoy continued popularity. It is a satirical description of a new dancing fad, set to a particularly captivating melody. This record is an abridged edition, so to speak, of Amberol No. 482." The Amberol record was sung by Miss Narelle and a little known tenor, Frederick H. Potter, and since a contralto assisted in the refrain, Miss Jordan probably was the contralto.

Here I shall remark parenthetically that the four-minute Amberol (re-issued in December, 1913, as Blue Amberol No. 2098), deserves special mention because of being the only record I know in which the noted vaudeville comedian, Bert FitzGibbons, sang. He was a member of the chorus which also included J. F. Harrison and W. F. Hooley.

During the next few months Mary Jordan sang in a variety of Edison records, though usually her presence can be detected only by reading the catalog descriptions. She and Elizabeth Spencer, soprano, and Anthony and Harrison constituted the Edison Mixed Quartet which sang No. 803, "When the Roll Is Called Up Yonder"—a far remove from Miss Jordan's recital renditions of Beethoven, Brahms and Strauss! She also took part in a series of four records containing airs from "Pinafore," the other singers being Miss Spencer, Anthony, Harrison, Walter Van Brunt and William F. Hooley. In January, 1912, she had the incidental part of Ivonne in No. 876, "Music Caressing of Violins," from "The Sirens," a duet by Miss Spencer and Mr. Anthony.

There appear to have been no Mary Jordan solos until No. 2158, "My Heart At Thy Sweet Voice," from "Samson and Dalila," was issued in February, 1914. Then in June came No. 2307, "Sweet Thoughts Of Home," described as "the song hit of 'Love's Lottery,' the comic opera in which Mme. Schumann-Heink, the Wagnerian contralto, starred a few seasons ago. Mary Jordan, a prominent figure in grand opera at the present time, through her position as one of the leading contraltos of the Century Opera Company, New York City, is heard at her best in this rendition."

Apparently those two Blue Amberols are the only solo records ever issued by Mary Jordan, although the quotations I have copied from the New Phonogram seem to indicate she was still singing for Edison in 1916 and 1917. If she was, she must have been heard in concert work on Diamond Discs, for Edison gave up direct recording of cylinders after the disastrous factory fire of December, 1914.

Mary Jordan in 1912 as Laura, the Doges' wife in the opera, "La Gioconda."

Just how long the contralto's recording career continued is a matter of uncertainty. It may have continued until she married Colonel Cresson and moved to Texas.

Regardless of how long or short that career may have been, the lady now bedridden and with failing vision was a great artist on the testimony of all the qualified judges who heard her. It is my sincere hope that this article will be a source of pleasure as her birthday nears and that both her health and sight will improve so that she may enjoy many more pleasant years. I am sure that all her admirers who read HOBBIES will join me in this wish.

The foregoing article was submitted in manuscript to Mary Jordan, who has graciously approved it. However, in expressing her approval and appreciation, she has provided so much more valuable information. I am submitting this "appendix," to quote the greater part of what the contralto wrote. For the sake of musical history, it deserves inclusion:

June 14, 1956. Dear Jim Walsh: I scarcely know how to begin to answer your kind letter and article, showing you have spent a lot of time reading the notices I sent you. I will look forward, God willing, to the Nov. & Dec. issues of HOBBIES—and what birthday gift!

I found this list of records I made for Edison and Columbia in an old book yellow with age and falling apart. This is marked "continued." Where the first part is I don't know. (The list is quoted at the end of the article—J. W.)

I was with the Edison Company when they changed to the discs. We had to make three perfect ones, in case one or more would be broken in transit to the factory. My voice was too full and round for solos; in fact, the voice had to be pointed, like a tenor or soprano; the whiter and more nasal the tone the better it would cut into the record. John Young, Fred Wheeler, Charles Harrison, Marie Narelle, Elizabeth Spencer, were perfect for recording solos, but I was in almost every combination where the voices had to blend and sing accurately. For instance, the Sextet. It took us three months to make a perfect record, with Mr. Edison in charge. He was trying to synchronize the vibrations of tone color and action, and he stayed with it until he accomplished it.

Records were sent to every silent moving picture house in America. I saw it 'way out in Columbus, Ohio. It was the beginning of the moving pictures with sound. The colors are not perfected yet.

However, my goal was opera. I was told that unless I went to Europe and had the stamp of approval of Germany, France and Italy, I would not stand a chance. I grit my teeth and said if America could not develop the talents of her own people without dictation of foreign countries it was too bad, and so my first effort was to use the music of our American composers. I never gave a concert that I did not have a group of American compositions. I talked it up in public and to all press men. Then Louise Homer fell in line as her husband, Sidney Homer, wrote songs but could not get them started, only when she or I sang them. I was not too proud to sing opera in English, and the people loved it because they knew what it was all about.

Just at that time, Hammerstein came back to New York and threatened to produce opera in English, so the Metropolitan organization paid him one million a year to stay out for ten years. The Met leased the century theater for a period of years, and gave operas every Monday night in their original language and the rest of the week in English, so we had to learn every opera in two languages. They engaged Mr. Milton Aborn as manager and a fine one he was. He spent his life trying to bring opera in English to Americans. The conductors were foreigners and all stage equipment and costumes were furnished by the Met. I bought and owned my own, but they were made and designed by Mme. Museur, wardrobe mistress at the Metropolitan. We had the same stage manager, etc., so we always felt we were part of the Met. I had an opportunity to go there in minor roles, but I could make more money in one concert than they would pay in a month, and they asked a percentage on all concerts, etc. Some like

Miss Jordan as "Amneris" in Aida, in her debut at the Boston Opera House in 1911.

Werrenrath, a poor actor, and some of the others took it but dropped it later — Sophie Braslau, for one.

I finished my opera career satisfied I could make the goal without some Europeans' say-so. During the war, all foreign performers were ordered out of the country and the American talent had a chance. Some had better voices but lacked training.

I sang ten years as contralto soloist in Temple Emanuel, 43rd street and Fifth avenue, — highest paid salary for churches in New York City: 12 years in Dr. Ayuless' Presbyterian church in Brooklyn, and 12 summers in the Elberon, New Jersey, Moses Taylor Memorial church. The church quartet was John Young, Marie Stoddart, Grant O'Dell and myself. Robert Gaynor was organist. He also was with the Edison Company. People came from long distances to attend our services. Dr. and Mrs. Baruch (Barney Baruch's mother and father) never missed a Sunday. I became known as an oratorio singer and every year sang with Frank and Walter Damrosch in Carnegie Hall, creating many first performances.

I sang the voice in the Greek dramas given by Margaret Anglin and the Damrosch Orchestra in Carnegie Hall. Edith Chapman and I had a standing engagement to sing in Das Rheingold, the Rhine Maidens, with Damrosch. I sang a group of Ernest Bloch's songs with the Philharmonic, Stransky conducting — the first time this weird and difficult music was heard in this country. I opened the new auditorium in Portland, Oregon, with Louis Graveure, and sang in many combinations of quartets, among them Reed Miller, Florence Hinkle, Frank Croxton and myself, and Inez Barbour, Will Wheeler, Herbert Witherspoon and I.

You have aroused my memory of contemporaries. I could go on and on. Frederic Martin, bass; Royal Fish, tenor of St. Patrick's Cathedral, New York; Elizabeth Tudor and I sang the first oratorio, "The Messiah," in San Antonio, before I ever knew my husband.

At Manila in the Philippine Islands, I established the voice department in the University. Quezon gathered 60 voices from every part of the Islands. I learned and sang their native songs in native costume presented to me by my class. I went on the theory that music is a universal language. I developed one native soprano with the most beautiful quality, not native but western, and

Early American Illustrations of Santa Claus

By GEORGIA S. CHAMBERLAIN

We all know the story of how Clement C. Moore, L.L.D., Professor of Oriental and Greek literature at the General Theological Seminary, New York, in 1822, while driving from the city to his home in the then suburb of Chelsea with gifts for his children composed his immortal "A Visit From St. Nicholas." Miss Butler, a guest at the time it was written, retained a copy which she caused, a year later, December 23, 1823, to be printed in the Troy, N. Y. Sentinel, with, however, no credit-line to Moore.

The wood-engraving which illustrated the poem was by Myron C. King, then only twenty-three years old, who a year later was to engrave badges for the local reception committee when LaFayette came to Troy on his triumphant tour of the United States. Santa's eight reindeer, his fur cap, the toys in a basket in the sleigh, and his pipe giving off clouds of smoke are capitally rendered. This first minute engraving of Santa Claus has the wintry atmosphere, the magical excitement, and the feeling of the swish of the sleigh over the gabled roof-top, ever associated with him.

The Dutch corbie-stepped facade of the house in this first illustration of "A Visit From St. Nicholas" is surmounted by a weather-cock, the symbol of St. Peter. In 1848 Washington Irving presented a copper weather-vane in the shape of a cock to the St. Nicholas Society which he helped to found in 1835. According to tradition this weathercock was the very one that surmounted Federal Hall where Washington took the oath of office as first President of the United States.

The New-York Historical Society guards this precious possession except when it is used in the festivals of the St. Nicholas Society of New York. Each year on December sixth when the St. Nicholas Society members gather to honor their patron saint, St. Nicholas, the trumpeter in old Dutch costume enters the banquet hall playing "Mynheer Von Donck" followed by the body guard of negroes in the livery of the Society, these in memory of Washington's household servants, bearing the weathercock. After the symbolic bird is placed before the President and pointed north-east toward Connecticut from where the British interlopers came, the arms of two windmills turn, and the oratory begins, a favorite joke implying the wind is rising when the speakers hold forth.

John Gadsby Chapman, artist of Alexandria, Va., and Washington, D. C., had moved to New York in 1835 and had probably witnessed some of these St. Nicholas Society ceremonies as he was an active member of several clubs, for he incorporated the bugler with a feather in his hat and the windmill in his delightful illustration of "A Visit From St. Nicholas" which appeared in 1840 in "The Poets of America." Chapman is the only early artist to have shown Santa with a feather, a favored adornment on Dutchman's hats in the old days.

A member of the National Academy of Design, winner of the commission for "The Baptism of Pocahontas," colossal mural in the rotunda of the National Capitol, and illustrator for many books and periodicals, Chapman had a facility and versatility that made him successful in the fields of etching, wood engraving, lithography, painting and sculpture. Tuckerman relates that "at intervals he made ingenious toys for his children, attended a club meeting, or went up the Hudson to rusticate and fish."

This delightful father-artist was credited by Frank Weitenkampf, American print authority, in an article in the New York Sun, Friday, December 24, 1943, as the first illustrator of Santa Claus as we know him today. Weitenkampf referred to a sketch which appeared in 1847 in the paper "Brother Jonathan" (established by Benjamin H. Day, founder of the Sun, who was to be immortalized by his son Clarence Day, in "Life with Father"). In Chapman's picture, the basket-like container for the toys which appears in all these early illustrations contains beside the switches, among other objects, a puppet, a sword and a trumpet; the pocket of Santa's fur-trimmed coat holds a windmill and skip-rope. Santa is placing a very limp doll into the little girl's stocking as she and her brother sleep in a trundle-bed, unaware of the bearded Saint at his work, his fur hat trimmed with a feather.

It was some time before it became the custom in New York to celebrate Christmas on December 25. New Years Day, the traditional Dutch day for visiting one's friends also was a day for exchanging gifts, and in some families, Santa Claus came on New Year's Eve, as witness a sketch of him by Charles Cromwell Ingham, National Academician also, which appeared Saturday, January 2, 1841, in the New-York Mirror. The Irish born Ingham gained fame as an artist for his exquisitely and carefully finished portraits of elegant women. Lacking the facility of a born illustrator such as Chapman, Ingham's sketch is rather labored; he reduced the reindeer from eight to two and hid them behind the chimney. The meticulous rendering of the toys, however, gives us an accurate cross-section of what a child in 1841 might expect from Santa Claus. In the sleigh, beside the switches which appear to be coming out of the stuffed tiger's head are bows and arrows, a little chair, a hen, a drum, a tambourine and balls. From

ANTIQUE JEWELRY

JEWELRY FROM EARLY TIMES

The art of jewelry making, and its use, is as old as time. Excavations into the tombs of ancient Egyptians show that as far back as 2400 B.C. jewelry was held in high esteem. In 1894-1895, one J. de Morgan at Dahshur, excavated the intact jewels of five princesses of the 12th Dynasty. The treasure of one of the princesses contained the jewels with the name of a person thought to be her father. All forms of work were included in this find—such as inlay, soldering twisted wires, filigree, insertions of stones, etc.

About 1000 years later, an archaeologist working in Egypt found a fine collection of jewelry in the coffin of Queen Aah-hotep. The collection is now housed in the Cairo museum. A diadem of gold and enamel was found at the back of the head of the mummy of the queen. The queen at the time of her burial wore a necklace with three pendant flies of solid gold. It was carefully made and had a hook and loop to fasten it around her neck. Another necklace buried with her was of gold with a scarabaeus of gold. The bracelet buried with the queen looks very much like some of these that we see on the market today. It is a wide engraved band and made in two parts, and held together by a hinge. It is decorated with figures in repoussé on a ground inlaid with lapis lazuli.

Thin plates of gold, decorated with thin slabs of garnet, after the fashion of cloisonné enamel are representative of the Merovingian jewelry of the fifth century.

Roman jewelry, even as modern day jewelry, underwent many changes. The Roman empire jewelry was identified by large cut stones in combination with the gold. Gold coins were also adapted to jewelry during that era.

"Art is indeed not the bread, but the wine of life." — JOHN PAUL RICHTER

Words On Art Well Spoken

From a formal letter of Everett D. Graff, President of the Art Institute of Chicago, to friends of the Museum.

"Thank heaven for history! If it weren't for 'remembrance of things past' we would certainly conclude that our own problems and tribulations are without parallel. Luckily as we look back, we find that our difficulties are not so unusual after all."

"Right now it gives me considerable pleasure to recall the case of James McNeill Whistler, who is currently considered so safe, so sane, so serene, especially in his portraits of his mother and Carlyle, and other gentle canvases. But there was a day when John Ruskin, the acknowledged dean of English critics, denounced Whistler roundly and declared that the artist had thrown a paint pot into the face of the British public.

"Then too I like to recall that there was a group of artists in France whose work was considered so horrifying that they were called "Les Fauves"—the wild beasts. The names of some of that ferocious band are honored everywhere now, for among them were Matisse, Braque, Vlaminck and Dufy.

"I am in need of what philosophy I can muster because (as you may have guessed) the Exhibition of Artists of Chicago and Vicinity has caused its usual furor. I say 'usual furor' because it seems that every time the Art Institute exhibits contemporary work, either in the American show or in the Chicago exhibition, there are shouts and murmurs on every side. I am no authority on contemporary art myself. Far from it. My major interest has been in paintings by the Old Masters, where the artists are all safely dead, and where scholarship and the judgment of the years have established standards that are easily recognized.

"How different is the case of contemporary painting and sculpture. There are many schools, many opinions, many controversial points of view. Whatever works are chosen for an exhibition, they always turn out, it would seem, to be the wrong ones. At one time or another critics, collectors, and even our own curators selected the exhibit. When there were criticisms of these methods, it was changed so that artists and not curators decided which entries should be hung and which rejected, as well as which should be awarded prizes. For the current show the jurors consisted of Gordon Washburn, director of Carnegie Institute and the man responsible for the great international exhibitions held in Pittsburgh; Hedda Sterne, a noted artist in her own right and wife of Steinberg who does those spidery drawings; and Ibram Lassaw, a sculptor whose work is widely known. Surely no jury could be considered less likely to be charged with bias and favoritism. Theirs was the difficult task of choosing about 200 works of art from among the 2027 which were submitted.

"Our Committee on Contemporary Painting is considering still other methods of arranging these controversial exhibitions. Perhaps a way can be found that will be more satisfactory to artists, critics and public alike. Whatever means may be taken, however, the important point, it seems to me, is that the Art Institute MUST continue to show contemporary work. Maybe you won't like it all. Maybe the critics won't either. But it is our obligation to exhibit it because art is part of our contemporary life and we would be remiss if we did not present it. And I should like to make clear that it is not our intention here to dictate what subjects a painter or sculptor should select, what materials he should use, or how he should compose. We can only hope, in spite of everyday clamor and disapproval, that in our exhibitions would be the Whistlers and Fauves of the future.

"This is a long letter, and could be longer still because the subject is an important one. Perhaps I should add that it is interesting to note that modern art is so alive and vigorous that it brings forth these strong responses."

Football Bank

By F. H. GRIFFITH

The Football Bank, another English made mechanical bank, is our choice as No. 51 in our numerical classification of the mechanical banks. This is an attractive bank with its sporting subject and quite scarce even though there were apparently a considerable number of them manufactured.

The bank was made by the English concern, John Harper & Company, who also made the Wimbledon Bank and the well known Dinah Bank. Harper was active in the mechanical bank field and turned out a number of interesting desirable specimens in addition to the above mentioned banks.

The Football Bank is a registered item, and while intended as a toy savings device, it was apparently also sold to various Clubs. The bank is shown in one of the old Harper catalogs and the statement is made that it could be "Supplied In Club Colours For Orders Of Six Dozen Or More." This would indicate that the bank was possibly used as a trophy or prize among certain English clubs or as a gift to members with the respective club colors on the bank.

The bank shown is from the fine collection of L. C. Hegarty, an enthusiastic mechanical bank collector. He obtained it some years ago from an Eastern antique dealer who in turn had found it in England. The bank is in fine completely original condition with no repairs and excellent paint.

The bank is painted as follows: The base is entirely green simulating a field with grass-like indentations in the casting. The name "Football Bank" appears on the base in raised letters and these are gold in color. The shed-like structure, properly called basket, on the end of the bank is an overall brown. This has diamond shaped grillwork in the back. The rear corners have oval perforations in the casting and the sides are a herringbone type pattern. The top is lattice-like slots. There is a white goal post on each side of the front with a cross-piece at the top also painted white. The front of the basket is a woven lattice effect with diamond shaped openings alternately painted reddish-maroon and white. The coin holder just in front of the figure is brown. The figure of the player has brown shoes, black socks, and white trunks. He has a turtle neck sweater in reddish-brown with blue sleeves and collar. His hair is black and the facial features are fine and distinct.

The bank operates as follows: A coin is placed in position in the coin holder, then the player's right leg is pulled back into kicking position where it is held in place by the operating lever. On pressing the lever the player kicks the coin into the opening between the goal posts on the basket. A screw on the underside of the base allows the basket to raise for removal of coins.

A point of interest is in the figure of the player being made of brass, as is the operating lever. The rest of the bank is cast iron. In making the figure in brass the manufacturer undoubtedly felt that this metal would stand certain strains in the kicking action better than cast iron.

The Football Bank, like several other of the sporting motif mechanical banks, is an attractive desirable item. Not many have turned up to date as there are only about six known to exist in private collections.

Match Box Labels of the World

By A. J. CRUSE

The coloured labels adorning the familiar match box have been in use for more than a century since John Walker, an English chemist, gave the world its first friction match in 1826. They have portrayed an ever-increasing variety of subjects, colours and designs from glamorous women to nursery rhymes, historical scenes, to beasts and fishes. These labels are now much sought after by collectors all over the world who enjoy a hobby which is even older than stamp collecting, offering an equally wide range of colorful and interesting material. "Match Box Labels of the World" will introduce beginners to a delightful hobby, provide a work of reference for experienced collectors; while the subject being both original and full of interest, should have a wide appeal. BELLS

JINGLE BELL TOWN

By LOIS SPRINGER

Never a Christmas passes that we are not reminded of American place names appropriate to the season. Christmas being a season of bells, we might include on that list the little town of East Hampton, snuggled in the picturesque Connecticut valley. For over a half century East Hampton, Conn., has been par excellence the Bell Town of America that supplies 90% of the small bells used in the world. Here over 50,000,000 bells are manufactured each year, bringing cheer, guidance, welcome and solace to almost every town of the world.

Although East Hampton does not claim to have made the sleighbells worn by Santa's reindeer, it does claim to have had the first sleighbell factory in America. It was William Barton who "set the bells ringing" in East Hampton, when in the spring of 1808 he erected a small factory for handbells and sleighbells on the hill that bears his name today. His was the first factory in the United States exclusively for bell-making.

fortunate the collector who possesses early American sleighbells marked with the initials W. B. indicating they were cast by this pioneer American sleighbell maker who was also the first to cast sleighbells in one piece. The earlier method had been to make them in two parts and solder the pieces together.

After eighteen years in East Hampton (1808-1826), William Barton settled in Cairo, N. Y., but his descendants continued sleighbell making in East Hampton for many years. Bells marked with the initials H B are attributed to his sons Hiram and Hubbard. Those marked W E B and having a tiny image of a horse on them are attributed to his grandson William E. Barton. These latter are among the most cherished of sleighbell collectibles.

There were many other early bell-makers in East Hampton. Thirty firms sending forth hundreds of millions of bells have at various times flourished in this community, most of the founders, however, having learned their trade in the Barton shops.

Quite a few products of these early bell-makers can be identified in collections today, particularly the sleighbells, for often the makers stamped these with their initials. Clark N. Smith and his partner marked theirs SMITH & PARSONS. Veasey and Buell, another firm flourishing about 1850, made sleighbells marked B B.

Then there were Niles & Strong, the Walls family, the Hills, the Starrs, the Bevins, etc., these last three still in existence now.

Incidentally, an excellent place to see examples of early American sleighbells made by East Hampton firms is at Old Sturbridge Village Barn. It must not be imagined, however, that all such bells can be identified by their makers' initials. Not all companies initialed their sleigh-bells; and the work of some early makers has gone unrecorded so that certain initials cannot be identified. It must be pointed out, too, that some bells were frequently marked with the initials of the harness makers who ordered them in quantity.

Today East Hampton's number of bell-making factories has been reduced to four: the Bevin Brothers Manufacturing Co., Starr Brothers Bell Company, the N. N. Hill Brass Company and the Gong Bell Manufacturing Co. There is rivalry still, as in days of old, but only of the friendliest kind nowadays; and the truck and trainloads of products going to distant markets each day are evidence of the ingenuity among present day owners of these factories.

Bevin Brothers trace their history back to 1832 when their business was founded by several Bevin brothers, two of whom had been apprenticed in the Barton shops. Today the firm is managed by the fifth generation in the family. Few American enterprises can boast of continuous operations for 125 years, as can this well known foundry.

Although the company has long made every conceivable kind of functional bell, collectors are most interested in the details of their sleighbell making. Too long to quote here, an excellent account of Bevin's sleighbells is given in Edwin Valentine Mitchell's delightful book The Horse and Buggy Age in New England.

The Starr Brothers, although not incorporating until 1882, actually began making bells as early as 1840 when John, Vine, Wilbur and Mortimer Starr all were employed in various East Hampton factories. Like Bevin Brothers, this firm still casts sleighbells in the same molds used over 100 years ago and still ships all kinds of bells everywhere in the world. Interestingly enough, among the largest buyers of sleighbells are the American Indians, who use them in their ceremonial dances.

East Hampton's other two remaining bell firms, the Gong Bell Manufacturing Co. and the N. N. Hill Brass Company, date back to 1866 and 1889 respectively; and both can trace their relationship back to the original William Barton, which proves that Barton was indeed "The blessed man who set the bells ringing in East Hampton."

Too, both companies have a history indicative of the changes that have come to Jingle Bell Town over the years. The Gong Bell Manufacturing Co. was organized to make doorbells exclusively. But six years after its inception, the Yankee inventiveness of its partners was coming to the fore. E. G. Cone, one of the partners, patented the acorn shape sleighbell which became an exclusive product of this company. Straps of these acorn shape sleighbells are highly prized by collectors owning them.

Elijah Barton, another early partner, designed and patented his first bell toy, a pair of cast brass gongs mounted between a pair of iron wheels. Soon 500 of the "Revolving Chimes" were being produced daily, an amazing record for that day and age. Now one punchress can, and does, produce 25,000 bell toys daily.

An unusually handsome set of horse-parade bells from an early East Hampton maker. Now in the collection of Mrs. Laura Whitman.

Typical of the bell toys that East Hampton has long been producing are these favorites from the Gong Bell Manufacturing Company.

More thousands of bell toys come from N.N. Hill Brass Company, operated now by a great-great-great grandson of William Barton. Begun with a capital of only $800, this foundry became the largest in the world devoted exclusively to bell making. Here were made the very first stamped steel bells.

The sleighbell was, of course, Jingle Bell Town's most popular item of all time, and the older employees have regretfully eyed its decline with the coming of the automobile. Meanwhile this little community keeps ringing out the old and ringing in the new to the sound of 50,000,000 jinglers a year, thanks to the bell makers' inventive and progressive inclinations.

Carl Price offers perhaps the best explanation of the happy prosperous spirit pervading Jingle Bell Town when he attributes it in part to the volume of bell toy business transacted there today, thus labeling East Hampton one of Santa's most important workshops. "Each year for seven decades, according to Mr. Price, Santa drives down from his northern home, and halting his reindeer in Jingle Bell Town, he loads his capacious sleigh with bell toys; for he knows full well that the little children love best of all those playthings that ring the music of jingling bells to make the heart merry on Christmas morning."

We are much indebted to several East Hamptonites for their assistance in compiling the material in this article. Our thanks go to Gordon D. Bevin and Mrs. C. S. Noren; also to Maude A. Clark of North Franklin.

OLD VEHICLES

Some Notes On Historic Wooden Ships

By D. TUDOR HARRELL

History tells us that early vessels were made in the form of a fish, or the underbody of a water fowl, the inhabitants of the valley of the Nile, believing that the souls of the dead needed such vessels on their voyage to the other world. Death boats were elaborate, with carved oars, masts and sails.

Up until 300 B.C., vessels of the Egyptians were sailing boats. Early drawings show these as low crafts with a mast and a square sail, set far up in the bow. The aft was a small cabin for the passenger.

Some time later their boats were decked in, and masts were lowered to the deck roof when not needed. Paddlers replaced sails. These were slaves, working under the rule of an overseer with a whip.

Another change in rowing was the huge paddle or oar, mounted on a forked post in the center of the stern. It was worked by means of a leather loop.

The Egyptians tried out their boats on the Nile and Mediterranean, spreading their voyages farther and farther, picking up trade.

Whence came the custom of initialing sleighbells? Was it an American custom originating with East Hampton bellmakers, or was it an earlier custom started by English founders? If the cut-size old bell illustrated here could be positively identified, we might better answer the question.

English collectors having these balloon-like bells bearing the initials R W claim that they are at least 150 years old, having been cast by Robert Wells of Aldbourne, Wiltshire, who flourished 1764-1799. Some American authorities believe these bells were made by the old Walls family of East Hampton a century ago.

The former theory would perhaps seem more correct since all the bells of this type of which we know have been purchased in England. Also, judging by the texture and appearance of their metal, they are well over 100 years old. In diameter these bells exceed the No. 20 sleighbell produced by Bevins of East Hampton and are generally conceded to be the largest size manufactured there.

OLD SILVER

Silver With Our Popular Holiday Motif

By LOUISE CIRILLO

Note the two cleverly worded ads for Christmas spoons to catch the eye of the public in the years 1894 and 1895 as taken from the old "Century Illustrated Monthly Magazines." These are two of the more popular designs and will be found represented in many of the collections—I thought all collectors would find it interesting to see just HOW they were first offered to the public, and when. Note especially the lettering on the small one by Gorham that has been placed just below its bowl—"Too good for the Dry Goods Stores — Jewelers only!"

Silver with holly, and sometimes in combination with mistletoe, made appropriate handle decorations for spoons at the gift-giving season. Unlike the regular "souvenir" spoon, these were used for personal gifts and will usually be found with an engraved name, date or place that had been added after the spoon was purchased. All but number five are so decorated and it is one from a set of twelve "Month Spoons" and was probably purchased with an entire set. Few will be found with this type handle and will have an embossed bowl decoration; they were popular for many years as holiday remembrances.

Holly alone, was a popular motif for silver—it will be found on serving pieces, hollow ware and on entire sets of flatware in both sterling and plate.

All, here illustrated, except the bon bon has some reverse decoration: numbers 3, 5 and 6 are most ornate and heavily patterned on both front and back—the sterling is extra heavy in weight. All are sterling and reading left to right (or by numbers), their makers are as follows:

A lovely CHRISTMAS GIFT! THE AMERICAN STORY IN SPOONS

535 pages, profusely illustrated, on enamel-gloss paper, linen binding. The spoon was one of the earliest inventions of man. Being a kind of ladle, it was always a prime necessity for conveying liquid foods to the mouth. A French courtier, De la Borda, truthfully remarked that "spoons are old, I will not say, as the world, but certainly as soup." With discovery of fire and the heating of tools, better results than the hand was needed. Shells were the readiest substitute, for they lay accessible in all sizes and shapes along the river banks and ocean beaches. Valve mollusks, like the cockle, oyster, and clam, supplied the most natural form of spoons. Indeed, the Greek word for spoon meant the same as valve or shell. The English word for spoon is derived from the Anglo-Saxon SPON, meaning a chip of wood, and has cognate forms in Dutch, Danish, Swedish, and German. In Northern Europe the first spoons were carved from bone. Metal specimens were devised from the horns of cattle, bronze, and eventually from silver and gold. From the INTRODUCTION. Price $10.00 postpaid.

MUSEUM NEWS

Old Railroad Locomotives In Smithsonian

Railroading fans who bewail the passing of the "iron horse" will be interested to learn that the Smithsonian Institution has on exhibit all the known remains of all the steam locomotives used in this country before 1835.

This adds up to one operable locomotive, built in 1831, and parts of four earlier ones, according to a recent publication of the Smithsonian's U.S. National Museum.

The locomotive is the John Bull, built in Britain for a New Jersey line now part of the Pennsylvania Railroad. It was placed in service November 12, 1831, and remained in active use until 1865. Since then it has been on display at most of the major fairs and expositions in this country.

The oldest relic is the safety valve of this country's first rail locomotive—built as an experiment by Col. John Stevens, of Hoboken, N. J., in 1825. He ran the locomotive around a small circular track on his front lawn.

Another relic is a wheel—said to be all that remains of the original De Witt Clinton. This famous locomotive in 1831 was the first to run in New York State, near Schenectady on tracks now a part of the New York Central System.

Also in the Smithsonian are parts of two British-built locomotives, the America and the Stourbridge Lion. They were bought in 1829 by the Delaware & Hudson for use on their coal road near Honesdale, Pa. The Lion was the first to be operated in America on a railroad built for commercial traffic.

The author, Smith Hempstone Oliver, could find only 10 other operable locomotives, in addition to the Smithsonian's John Bull, remaining of the many hundreds built during railroad-ing's pioneer days, before 1850. These, and 7 full-sized operable replicas of other famous early locomotives, are described in his profusely illustrated book, "The First Quarter-Century of Steam Locomotives in North America."

The railroad historian Thomas Norrell, of Silver Spring, Md., has contributed the color frontispiece to the publication, which may be purchased at $1 from the Superintendent of Documents, in Washington, D. C. The photograph shows a "One Armed Billy" of the 1830's—the Lafayette—in action during the filming of the recent Disney classic, "The Great Locomotive Chase."

The Syracuse Museum of Fine Arts, Syracuse, N. Y., is holding an exhibit by The 19th Ceramic National—the 2nd Biennial which will be there through Dec. 2. On exhibit are 444 pieces representing work of craftsmen from 28 states, the District of Columbia, Hawaii and Canada. Prize winners and other works will be circulated by the museum through 1957 and 1958. The show may be seen at the new Museum of Contemporary Crafts, New York City, Jan. 10-Feb. 10. The Story of Watch Crystals

By SILVIO A. BEDINI

As far as can be determined from the examples which have survived, the first pocket watches did not have crystals. The cases were wrought of metal, some in two halves like a pill box and others with a hinged pierced cover over the dial. The cover was pierced to provide small openings over the numerals. Late in the 16th Century the sides were made more rounded and the cover was domed. Unusual shapes became popular by 1600, including squares, stars, crosses and others. The engraved metal dial was often replaced with an enamel one, protected by a casing carved out of rock crystal, which was hollowed out to make room for the movement. This crystal covering was set into a metal bezel and hinged to form a cover. Often the crystal was reduced only to the function of a cover instead of a case, and thus the first watch crystal or "watch glass" came into being, some time after 1620. By the middle of the century, the watch case was being made most often of silver in the form of a round oval with a circular opening over the dial which was covered with a hinged domed protection of crystal or glass. These covers of crystal or glass were flat or slightly convex and cut out and polished on a primitive form of grindstone.

This type of watch crystal was followed by flattened spherical caps of glass. Small glass bulbs of glass were blown on very small glass-blowers' pipes and from each bulb two of the caps were cut with the aid of two red-hot rings of iron, the sudden expansion causing a circular crack. The edges of these glasses were polished with sand on a cast-iron plate or on a grindstone. It was a very tedious process for two successful caps could rarely be cut from one bulb and it was generally necessary to blow as many bulbs as the number of crystals desired.

Having a spherical outline, the glasses were very high in the center in order to accommodate a high center post required by the thick hands and square setting post, while the ends of the hands near the edge of the dial had a very narrow space in which to move. They were commonly known as "bull's eye" crystals.

Since the thick glasses had to be of individual sizes inasmuch as the watches of the period were of varying dimensions, the glassmaker would blow a sphere of approximately the desired size and then cut a section from it more or less the diameter of the watch bezel. A flat area was cut out in the center of the section, probably to reduce the height of the crystal, and a wooden knob cemented to it which enabled the grinder to hold the glass as he worked. The glass was reduced to the desired size by grinding on a wheel, and then polished. Finally, the knob was removed and the flat area polished by hand. The need for thinner crystals became apparent with the development of the watch and the high convexed glasses became inconvenient. As a result, flat glasses were produced with only a slight curve near the edges, made from thick, flat plates of glass hollowed out in the center and rounded off at the edges. Owing to their high price, they could be used only for the finest watches.

The concave watch crystals of the 19th Century were not produced on a grindstone as the watch crystals of the past; they were made by a method invented in Paris in 1791 by a glassmaker named Pierre Royer. His method was so successful that the manufacturers of Geneva imitated it and it developed into an important branch of the watchmaking industry.

Before Royer's process had come into general use, various experiments had been made for the production of watch crystals. In the glasshouse of Goetzenbrück, for instance, little phials were blown with slightly curved bottoms, which were cut off as concave glasses and finished to size. Since this required a new phial for each watch to be glazed, the process was too expensive.

As one improvement followed another, watch crystals became more perfect, due mostly to the skill of the glass blower. In Royer's process the glass blower took up several pounds of glass on his pipe using the wide end and he rolled the plastic glass on a damp block of wood to round it. He then blew into it gently, then a little harder and swung it to and fro, in order to lengthen it out, and with proper tools he gave it a long pear shape. Once it had reached the form he desired, he reheated it in the furnace and then blew it to a larger size, a steam blast being employed to finish the blowing. The finished product was a ball, hollow like a balloon, which was cut from the pipe and placed on the wooden work-bench upside down.

In some glasshouses the blowers succeeded in blowing these thin glass spheres in sizes ranging from 12 to 32 inches with ease, and some exceeded 40 inches in diameter. The walls of these large balls did not exceed 1/25th or at most 1/16th of an inch in thickness.

From these balls it was possible to cut and remove as many as 600 watch glasses. However, since the larger balls were more liable to breakage, and were more difficult to handle with rapidity, it was customary to make smaller ones and cut them in half.

First of all, a metallic pattern of a watch glass was made, and either pressed on the sphere, or upon a strip cut from it. While this was held in place with one hand, the other hand pressed a little hot tube around the edge of the metal pattern. This circle was immediately moistened with cold water, and the sudden contraction that followed the previous expansion caused the circular piece to crack off, leaving a more or less hemispherical crystal.

This process was superseded by another which made use of a tournette, a tool which resembled a carpenter's compass dividers, one leg being provided with a diamond cutter. L. Veyret of Lyons is credited with having perfected and introduced this instrument.

First of all, ten circles are cut on the large glass ball with the diamond cutting point. One of the circles thus marked is then removed by little strokes or taps around its edge. After one of the circles has been removed, the worker can then place his thumb through the opening in the glass ball and remove the others that have been marked by taking each of them firmly between thumb and forefinger and pressing gently outward.

The next stage is the shaping of

A Glass Globe from which three hundred Watch Crystals were cut the rim to make it fit the bezel for which it is designed. This is accomplished by placing the glass circles thus removed into muffles of refractory clay with coke. The muffles shave many little molds of the finest clay made in the exact shape the watch crystals are to have, the surface being nearly flat with the edges slightly raised. The workman lays a glass circle on each of the molds which have been previously prepared by sprinkling the clay with finely pulverized lime and clay to prevent them from sticking. The molds are then placed in the muffles. When the glass is softened a little, they are drawn out once more, the glass circles pressed into the clay with a wad of paper to make it take the exact shape of the mold.

A skilled workman could watch several molds and the process was considered to be quite a rapid one. The final step was to polish the watch crystals to remove the marks which were left on the glass by the process.

Another method of shaping consisted of using convex molds of a size slightly smaller than the glasses to be produced. When sufficiently heated, they were removed to a cast iron plate in front of the muffle and pressed down on the molds with a wooden lid of conical form. The projecting edge of glass that became heated first was softer so that it alone was pressed down by the lid. By this method only the edges needed polishing, which was accomplished on grindstones of hard material, to produce the beveled slightly projecting edge that held the crystal in the bezel. The final polishing was done with cork.

Still another method was employed, which consisted of grinding the glass circles or disks as soon as they were removed from the glass ball. The beveled edge was formed on sandstone wheels and then the glass disk was placed in the muffle without polishing to give it the arched or curved form. The ground edges were rounded by the heat and rendered smooth and brilliant and at the same time harder so that they could be set more easily into the bezel.

After the watch crystals had acquired the required shape by pressing the softened glass on to or into molds, they were finished off in another large room in the glasshouse which was fitted with grinding and polishing lathes. The grinding was of three types, called Flettage, Pontillage and Biseautage.

Flettage consisted of grinding away the convexed portion so that the outside of the glass disk was nearly all flat and thin in the middle, yet retaining its original thickness near the rim.

Pontillage was a process similar to the former, with the exception that only the center of the disk was ground down, forming a small circular spot that was slightly concave.

Biseautage consisted of grinding the edge to a proper bevel, so that it fit the crease of the bezel exactly. This operation was performed on steam-driven lathes and a single workman could tend eight or ten of them at the same time.

After a final polishing with pumice, the watch crystals were measured, sorted, inspected and then packed ready for shipping.

A Royal Doll Family Is Costumed

By CLARA H. FAWCETT

Whose heart was not stirred by the momentous event which took place on June 2, 1953—Coronation Day for young and lovely Queen Elizabeth II of England? Not all of us were in London to witness the magnificent procession from Buckingham Palace which wound its way to Westminster Abbey through miles of British subjects and others who had come from over the seas and far away places to witness this the spectacle of the century.

But most of us were there through the medium of radio and television. And television had it all over those Londoners who could not see the ceremony which took place inside the Abbey. The royal golden coach drawn by eight white horses carrying England's beloved queen, symbol of the British Empire, joined a procession that rivalled in splendor and grandeur the most elaborate of fairy tales.

Everyone loves a good show, and here in America, as in all parts of the world, people followed the events of the day with keen interest. One of our most famous "doll" artists, Martha Thompson, celebrated in her way by creating the royal family in doll form. And now another Martha, Martha Yeske, of West Hartford, Connecticut, with monumental patience and real love in her heart for the undertaking, has created costumes for this royal family of dolls that are the acme of perfection. It took seven months of painstaking work and the eye and heart of an artist to produce the costumes seen in the photograph by John Vignoli reproduced here. More than 3,000 tiny beads decorate the white satin gown of the Queen, and there are real diamonds at the ears and throat of the doll. Note the Tudor rose, the shamrock of Ireland, the leek of Wales and the thistle of Scotland. To duplicate these it took 200 pearls and 200 rhinestones.

Elizabeth's crown of velvet and jewels is not visible in the picture.

The Duke of Edinburgh, the Queen's husband, is resplendent in his naval uniform with its golden trappings and jewelled sword.

"Bonnie Prince Charlie," fairly glows in his white satin suit, and little sister, Princess Anne, is captivating in her dress of fine lace and real pearls.

Mrs. Yeske says "I have two daughters who are both married. The younger daughter, Joyce, at one time held the world's record in beauty contests; in 1951 she was chosen "Miss Television," then "Miss Connecticut of 1952," and she held fifty-two other titles. Joyce was also a dancer, and I used to make all her beautiful costumes. One costume had 15,000 sequins and beads on it. When Joyce got married I turned to dolls. I just love to work with beautiful things."

Mrs. Yeske's costumes will be an inspiration to those of us who have been waiting to dress their royal dolls in a truly authentic way. We hope that at some time in the future the dolls shown in the picture will find their way to a museum so that future generations can look back and see this famous family as it was on that day in June, 1953. In that event, the following copy of the Queen's Coronation broadcast placed with the dolls would be appropriate:

"When I spoke to you last, at Christmas, I asked you all, whatever your religion, to pray for me on the day of my Coronation—to pray that God would give me wisdom and strength to carry out the promises that I should then be making."

"Throughout this memorable day I have been uplifted and sustained by the knowledge that your thoughts and prayers were with me.

"I have been aware all the time that my peoples, spread far and wide throughout every continent and ocean in the world, were united to support me in the task to which I have now been dedicated with such solemnity.

"Many thousands of you came to London from all parts of the Commonwealth and Empire to join in the ceremony, but I have been conscious too of the millions of others who have shared it by means of wireless or television in their homes.

"All of you near or far, have been united in one purpose,

"It is hard for me to find words in which to tell you of the strength which this knowledge has given me.

"The ceremonies you have seen today are ancient, and some of their origins are veiled in the mists of the past. But their spirit and their meanings shine through the ages—never, perhaps, more brightly than now. I have in sincerity pledged myself to your service, as so many of you are pledged to mine. Throughout all my life and with all my heart I shall strive to be worthy of your trust.

"In this resolve I have my husband to support me. He shares all my ideals and all my affection for you. Then, although my experience is so short and my task so new, I have in my parents and grandparents an example which I can follow with certainty and with confidence.

"There is also this. I have behind me not only the splendid traditions and the annals of more than a thousand years but the living strength and majesty of the Commonwealth and Empire; of societies old and new, of lands and races different in history and origins, but all, by God's will, united in spirit and in aim.

"Therefore I am sure that this, my Coronation, is not the symbol of a power and a splendor that are gone but a declaration of our hopes for the future, and for the years I may, by God's grace and mercy, be given to reign and serve you as your Queen.

"I have been speaking of the vast regions and varied peoples to whom I owe my duty, but there has also sprung from our island home a theme of social and political thought which constitutes our message to the world and through the changing generations has found acceptance both within and far beyond my realms.

"Parliamentary institutions, with their free speech and respect for the rights of minorities, and the inspiration of a broad tolerance in thought and its expression—all this we conceive to be a precious part of our way of life and outlook.

coached her in Madame Butterfly and Aida. She went to Milan, Italy, and made her debut in Butterfly. Her husband was a painter, and Quezon financed them. She was a sensation. Another, Inez Gonzales, then only 18 years old, is singing with the American Opera Company in New York City. I sang all over China - Hongkong, Shanghai, Tien Tsin, Peking and in Japan, and sang in the first Wagnerian concert ever given in Manila. I sang the Rienzi aria and helped organize the orchestra.

Alexander Lippay came from Vienna to take over the music in the university and we started to organize an orchestra. He had to send for an expert tuner of instruments to teach them how to tune - they all played out of tune. But he organized a magnificent orchestra and gave an all-Wagner program - a program Toscanini would have been proud of.

The Negro spirituals, considered our American folk songs, were sung by me on one of my New York City recitals - the first white woman to sing Negro spirituals on the concert stage.

The radio concert you described was intended mostly for hospital patients. They attached ear phones to every hospital bed, and I sang the program from the shed through the huge brass megaphone. The following week,

Rosa Ponselle, who was my guest, and I gave a lovely concert for the patients. All who were able to come to the auditorium on the Post filled the hall. The others heard it over the ear phones. We both sang solos and they went wild over the duets. Our voices blended beautifully. The nurses could hardly get the patients back to the hospital. They shouted, "More! More!"

My good friend, I love your sentiment over your two cats, Roger and Gray. Mine went for dogs and birds - Hartz Mountain canaries. My prize canary, "Peppo," was given to me in a flower covered cage at one of my recitals in New York City, in 1917. I heard gentle, low, rolling tones when I sang, and could not imagine where they came from. When I came back to sing an encore, Kurt Schindler, my accompanist, said, holding up the cage, "Your competitor is a canary." The audience went wild over it - the first time I ever knew of such a gift presented over the footlights. I brought him to San Antonio and left him with my husband's mother to take care of while I was off to sing a few concerts. When I returned I found a little grave in my back yard. On the tombstone was engraved, "Here Lies 'Peppo,' the sweet singer." Her pet cat was jealous and jumped on the cage and killed the canary.

My Pekinese dog was Singo Wang, a thoroughbred. We always said he was going to talk before he died, and he did, in his own language. He lived 14½ years with us. He too has a tombstone — "Our Friend and Companion for Many Years."

So ends Mary Jordan's informative and charming addenda. Her list of records in which she took part includes the two solos mentioned—"My Heart At Thy Sweet Voice" and "Sweet Dreams Of Home." One record, "Adeste Fideles," is identified as a Columbia. It probably was one by the Columbia Mixed Quartet. Other titles, presumably all made for Edison as an ensemble member or in support of a soloist, are: "Old Black Joe," "Hymns and Bells," "My Old Town," "It's A Long Lane That Has No Turning," "The Siren," "Nearer My God, To Thee," "Where Is My Wandering Boy Tonight?" "There's A Girl In Havana," "Chimes of Normandy," "The Enchantress," "Oft In The Stilly Night," "Shall You, Shall I?" "O Be Happy," "Hail Columbia," "Where The Silvry Colorado Wends Its Way," "Excerpts From 'Patience,'" "Crossing The Bar," "Softly And Tenderly," "Darling Nellie Gray," "Gypsy Maid," "Beautiful Isle Of Somewhere," "How Fair Art Thou," "Excerpts From 'Erminie,'" and "Inflammatus From Rossini's 'Stabat Mater.'"

With her letter, Miss Jordan sent a copy of the October, 1923, National Magazine, edited by Joel Mitchell Chapple. It contains an article, illustrated with four photographs of the contralto, and headed, "American Musical Advantages Supreme." The subtitle reads: "One of the foremost of our opera and concert stars, who received her training in the United States, dispels the illusion of European instruction as the 'open sesame' to fame and an artistic career." The article reveals Miss Jordan was just 11 months of age when her parents left Wales and that she began her

CIRCUSIANA

By DANA STEVENS

QUESTIONS & ANSWERS

Q: How many circus performances did Merle Evans participate in before he retired from the Ringling show?

A: I think the figure comes to around 22,000 successive performances.

Q: What is considered the worst wreck in circus history?

A: I am assuming you have reference to circus trains. There have been many disastrous circus train wrecks down through the years. One of the earlier disasters occurred on May 30, 1893, at McCann's Crossing Pennsylvania. The Walter L. Main show was enroute to Tyrone, Pa., from Osceola, Pa., when it was wrecked at this crossing. Some thirty cars were demolished and smashed into splinters. Fortunately only five persons were killed. Cause of the accident was never determined.

Q: What happened to the Al G. Barnes Circus? Did it just quit, or what?

A: The Al G. Barnes Circus was merged with the Ringling Brothers and Barnum Bailey Circus in 1938.

Q: I've heard a lot about the duties of an anchor elephant with an elephant herd. Exactly what is an anchor elephant?

A: An anchor elephant is literally the disciplinarian of the herd. When anchored or tied to another elephant she can lead the other elephant wherever she pleases. An anchor elephant, however, is not necessarily stronger than her charges, but is simply more astute in throwing her weight around.

Q: What is meant when they call an elephant a jughead?

A: Jughead is the name they give a circus work elephant. Today the tractor has largely taken over the jughead's duties in putting up and taking down the big tents and spreads of canvas.

Q: Has the Sparks Circus been important in circus history?

A: Yes, indeed, the early Sparks show, in its heyday, was considered the model show of America. It inaugurated a new era in show business when it became the first circus to exchange its 54 foot flatcars for 72 foot all-steel cars.

Q: When and where was Barnum's famed African elephant Jumbo killed?

A: Jumbo was killed in a train accident in St. Thomas, Ontario, September, 1885.

DEER BUTTONS

By DOROTHY FOSTER BROWN

As long ago as 1938, I planned a "Deer" group to follow my first Button Group of "Dragons." But other subjects intervened and it has taken me all this time to "get around to" the Deer which I intended to show eighteen years ago.

Deer are highly decorative and lend themselves especially well to button ornamentation. I have already shown a number of Deer under other headings, in HOBBIES and BUTTON PARADE (pp. 50, 70, 74, 80). While not exactly plentiful on buttons, Deer are not too hard to find; and, like most button subjects, they grow in charm and interest as they are studied and compared.

Deer (of the family Cervidae) are ruminant, cud-chewing animals, having solid deciduous, branching antlers. The Moose is the largest member of the family. Caribou (reindeer), Wapiti and Elk are all Deer. I was planning to include a Chamois button in this group, but discovered in time that the Chamois is an Antelope; and while antelope are sometimes deer-like, they actually are members of the Ox (Bovidae) family. So if you are a perfectionist, you will not include antelope in your Deer Collection!

In these groups, I always try to show how each subject has been successfully adapted to different types and materials of buttons. In any hobby, it is interesting to note likenesses and differences, and the many variations which are possible to even the simplest subject. Each of these Deer is not just a Deer, but is an individual design, suited to its surroundings and substance.

No. 1. Tinted tin with raised design. The same deer is found with different borders and in different colors.

No. 2. "Perfume" button of pressed brass with background of dark red velvet. The design may have been suggested by Landseer's "Monarch of the Glen." I call it "The Stag at Eve" (described in the first canto of "The Lady of the Lake").

No. 3. Flat, black Plastic Horn, inlaid with pinchbeck or some similar silvery metal. Self-shank. Reverse: "Depose" and three dots. (Found also without any backmark).

No. 4. Brass Sporting button, slightly convex with raised design. Sporting buttons, of course, are a good source of deer designs. The back, perhaps, is the most interesting part of this button, since it bears an incised representation of "The Eagle," complete with olive branch and arrows. Whether this is merely an elaborate backmark, or whether the back was once a Uniform button in its own right, I cannot be sure. It is tempting to believe that it may have been converted from a Uniform to a Sporting button. If so, it was a professional job.

No. 5. Uniform button (officer) of the Seaforth Highlanders of Canada (Vancouver). Convex with plain field, raised design. The Deer is either a woodland caribou or a wapiti. Reverse "Jennens & Co. Ltd., London." Deer, like beavers, are very popular on Canadian buttons, stamps and insignia.

No. 6. British Livery button: one-piece, convex, silver-plated with design in high relief. The crest of a "Stag trippant" is borne by over one hundred different families, beginning with "Agmondesham" and ending with "Yarrow"; and including such well-known names as Evans, Foster, Green, Hart, Rogers, Robertson, Robinson, Scott and Thomas. Reverse: "Firmin & Sons, Ltd., Strand, London."

No. 7. Black glass with gold lustre; slightly convex with raised design. The black and gold are not clearly separated, as in most Lustre buttons, but are combined to give a pleasing all-over effect.

No. 8. A curious silhouette button of lacquered wood; convex with metal shank. The head is black against a reddish-brown background.

No. 9. Pearl-and-Metal Combination: the brass head is attached to the shank, which passes through the flat disk of iridescent pearl.

Through my interest in buttons, I am still learning things without trying to! For example, until I read up a little about Deer, for this group, I never knew that Deer have no gall bladders! Or that there are no Deer at all in Australia or South Africa, although they are found in all other parts of the world, and have existed since prehistoric times. The Irish Elk, famous for its great size, the Reindeer of Santa Claus, the Stag of St. Hubert, with the Cross between its antlers, and even Baron Munchausen's Stag with the cherry tree growing from its forehead,—all are examples of how this most decorative animal has survived over the centuries, in story and legend as well as in fact.

Deer are especially in evidence this time of year, with the hunting season soon to begin. And while deer hunting itself will always be a controversial sport, hunting for Deer on buttons is a most harmless pastime, and one with which the most humane animal-lover could find no fault. And the season for this sport is open all the year 'round!

—Dorothy Foster Brown

* "Trippant" means a "beast of chase" with foot lifted, as if walking briskly.

 St. Hubert is the patron saint of sportsmen and hunters. The Stag with Cross between his antlers appears in at least one rendition on a Picture button. Another button shows hounds attacking a Deer. (I don't like this button so didn't show it!)

 For those who may be unfamiliar with the story: Baron Munchausen met a stag while hunting, but had used up all his shot. He loaded his gun with powder and a handful of cherry-stones, which he happened to have with him (!) and hit the stag between the antlers, stunning it. It staggered away, however, and some years later, while hunting again, the Baron met the same stag, now with a ten-foot cherry-tree growing from its head. He killed it with a single shot and ate the cherries (with which the tree was loaded) along with the venison!

Kate Greenaway's First Christmas Card

By JOHN RUMBOLD

Available records indicate Kate Greenaway's first published drawings were engraved by her father, John Greenaway, for one of the weekly numbers of The Illustrated London News of the 1860's; and her first color prints were Christmas cards, printed and published by Marcus Ward & Co. in the closing years of the same decade. Some of these early unsigned cards have not yet been identified.

In 1868, when Kate Greenaway was an art student aged twenty-two, some of her sketches of fairies and elves, exhibited for the first time in the Dudley Gallery, Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly, attracted the attention of the editor of The People's Magazine, the Rev. W. J. Loftie, who in the same year reproduced several of them for The People's Magazine. Mr. Loftie, previously unacquainted with Miss Greenaway, introduced her to Mr. William Marcus Ward, Managing Director of the Royal Ulster Printing Works in Belfast, as a promising young designer of greeting cards. Up to this time Mr. Ward had printed a few Christmas and New Year cards for Messrs. Charles Goodall & Son, 17 St. Bride Street, London, who in common with many British publishers imported most of their color prints and ornamented embossed paper from Germany; and Mr. Ward had decided to extend the business by issuing greeting cards, printed in gold and colors, with the Marcus Ward & Co. trade mark.

According to Mr. Jonathan King, a valentine manufacturer, who about the year 1860 began an intensive study of the bibliography of Victorian greeting cards, a set of six small colored prints entitled, "The Story of Little Red Ridinghood's Christmas," designed by Kate Greenaway, was published by Marcus Ward & Co. in 1868. As one of the few cards of this series which has survived is dated by the original sender, "Xmas 1870," the first edition may have been published prior to this year as stated by King, and if so, it must be among the first series of Kate Greenaway pictures printed in color by Marcus Ward & Co.

Two specimens of the last card are shown in illustrations Nos. (5) and (6), the legend on a pink panel at the bottom reading in both, "Little Red Ridinghood spreads the fare;

There's plenty to eat and plenty to spare,
And O' such a merry time is there
With Red Ridinghood, Granny, and Christmas."

The card on the right, No. (6), has an embossed gold frame with cross-over corners ornamented with holly and ivy; the margins are also embossed with fine radiating lines. The card on the left, No. (5), is printed on flat stock. There are other differences which suggest that the flat cards may represent a first state or trial issue, possibly printed in 1868; the embossed copies, on the evidence of the above-mentioned handwritten note, may provisionally be considered the second edition of about 1870. Seven color impressions can be distinguished on the embossed cards, the flat cards have one more, visible in the reproduction as a cross-lined pattern on the Grandmother's shawl. As Marcus Ward & Co. frequently reprinted their best-selling cards, there may have been still other editions. It was probably a rather expensive production at this time, relief printing being an experimental feature to compete with elaborately decorated German importations. However, die stamping was evidently soon discarded as an unjustifiable cost item, for I know of no other Marcus Ward greeting cards with relief color printing. Messrs. Raphael Tuck & Co., who started Christmas card production about two years later, have continued to publish quantities of embossed cards through the seventies to the present day; their first cards of the early 1870's were, however, mostly less ambitious very small embossed designs of birds and flowers.

The printing is comparable with most English chromolithography of the late 1860's in that the register and gradation of the color impressions, red, blue, yellow, green, brown, pink and gold, are rather crude; but in other respects they show an advance on the Christmas card art of the time. Christmas cards of the late 1860's were usually single formalized designs in two or three colors of flowers, small embossed robins with sprays of holly, ivy or mistletoe, tiny snow scenes, circus subjects, or imported colored prints and tinsel ornaments stuck on an embossed or lace-paper backing. Many were simple modifications of small valentines of the period. A uniform group of colored prints illustrating a little Christmas story was something new, and may be credited to Miss Greenaway's and Mr. Ward's originality. The cards were also sold separately, and no doubt it occurred to Mr. Ward that sets of cards of the same format would lower production costs and help increase sales. In the 1870's and 1880's, series of cards often joined together in the form of a folder became a regular feature in the firm's sample albums for each season, and were quickly taken up by competitors.

It is reasonable to assume this Christmas card set was not the only one Miss Greenaway designed for Marcus Ward in the late sixties and early seventies, but although comparison of many small cards of about this time with sketches made in the early part of her career discloses certain points of similarity, as pointed out by Mr. Gleeson White in the 1894 Studio Christmas Number, (Christmas Cards And Their Chief Designers, London, 1895), identification is difficult because no records were kept and there is little or no resemblance to her later well-known signed work. Miss Kate Greenaway has preserved no complete set of her own designs — nor have her publishers; hence collectors must need exercise their ingenuity to discover which of the many cards that appear to be hers are genuine and which are imitations.

THE OLD YEAR

DRIVEN OFF THE EARTH BY THE ELVES OF FROST AND SNOW.

Pelt him with Snow-balls as white as his beard
(Gnomes have no pity and Elwins no heart)—
The Year has grown old in his sins, we're afraid
He'll do us more mischief ere he shall depart.
Let him go with his follies, his failures, his crimes,
Drive him off, jolly Gnomes, from the edge of the world;
Set the Bells ringing to bring in New Times,—
Into space and forgetfulness yesterday's hurled:
Off with the old Love, and on with the New,
And may the New Year be a glad one to you.

Some people spend their hobby funds on dubious (antique?) items without any real knowledge of trends and values. Books that give such authentic information are left for libraries and the wise dealer. Those listed below are ones you really NEED; but don't buy them on our say-so. Pick a sample and if not satisfied return for refund. KATE GREENAWAY'S FIRST CHRISTMAS CARDS

After the success of her first popular series (issued, as were the majority, by Marcus Ward), it is easy enough to discard the too-faithful disciples who never once caught her peculiar charm. But in the earlier of hers, when her manner was less pronounced, even the publishers are not always absolutely certain regarding the authorship of several designs . . ."

Mr. White mentions the Red Riding-hood set and, ". . . a few early cards published by Marcus Ward"; going on to say, "Without very minute and tedious detail, it is not possible to identify even these in written descriptions; but, unless collectors have at least as many sets (usually four in each series) as I have noted, they may still be certain that the most prized section of their collection is incomplete. How many more can be traced it would be pleasant to discover. Possibly this publication may lead some generous and fortunate owner of a complete set to divulge further facts regarding it." Unfortunately, it is most unlikely that anyone has yet succeeded in assembling anything approaching a complete series of the numerous Kate Greenaway Christmas cards and their many variants; and published references to those issued before 1873 are still meagre. No doubt scattered examples of many of her first modest designs are still to be found in collections of old cards and prints. A series of articles by Carroll Alton Means, published in HOBBIES, February to July, 1953, classified some of her unsigned cards of the 1870's. Mr. Means was concerned only with valentines; and although most of her later well-known designs were also used for other anniversaries - Christmas, New Year, Easter, Birthday, or just plain Greeting, suitable for any occasion and day in the year, it is believed her earliest work was intended and used only for Christmas and New Year cards. Mr. George Buday points out in "The History of the Christmas Card", London, 1954, that neither Gleeson White nor her biographers attempted to unearth and catalog her Christmas card designs, and this is still a matter for the future. (page 145). By carefully scrutinizing all Marcus Ward colored prints that have come to my notice, I have tried to make a start in this direction, and some of the results are the present illustrations.

The difficulty with the earliest greeting cards of Miss Greenaway's formative years is not exactly to distinguish the genuine from imitations, for at this time there were no imitations; but simply to decide which of the cards that may be hers were really based on her drawings. A number of Christmas cards, most of them with the Marcus Ward & Co. imprint, belonging to the period 1868 to 1874, have been found which show more or less evidence of the early Greenaway style. In a few cases resemblance to the known early work is so close, identification amounts almost to certainty; in others we can take into account the publisher's practice of employing the same artist for each card of a set; so that if we decide a certain card bears evidence of Miss Greenaway's style, it is safe to conclude the other cards of the same series were probably also reproduced from her drawings.

The four cards, Nos. (1)-(4), belong to a set, "Fairies and Elves," the title of one of them. If reference is made to a painting, "The Elf Ring," reproduced between pages 48 and 49 of Spielmann and Layard's biography, "Kate Greenaway" by M. H. Spielmann and G. S. Layard, London, 1905, it will be noticed there is a close resemblance of the robin and the elves in the painting to the robin and elves in the first two cards of this set. See also the sketches on page 75 and 107. It is pointed out by the authors that in her student days she aspired to become a humorous artist, and we see here traces of the influence of Richard Doyle, the designer of the famous cover of the London magazine, "Punch"; but there are several unmistakable Greenaway peculiarities. Notice in particular the feet of the fairy wielding the paint brush in No. (1) and their apparent lack of support by the holly branch on which she is standing. Many of Kate Greenaway's figure drawings suggest the same airy floating, a technical defect she never quite mastered; it is noticeable in her work as late as the 1890's, and was usually exaggerated in caricatures. Although the coloring of the little chromolithographs is bright and gay, it is rather harsh and might well be termed, "gaudy," recalling Miss Greenaway's own criticism of her first Christmas card designs. "Like many beginners, she imagined that a sufficient number of bright colors made a bright-colored picture and, being disappointed with the result, complained to Mr. Loftie . . ." 'Kate Greenaway,' by Spielmann and Layard, page 46. Each card of the set has a descriptive title and verse on the back by J. Hain Friswell, without which they would not be easy to understand. The titles may have been supplied by Miss Greenaway. The subjects and the printing both suggest a somewhat earlier date than the Red Ridinghood set noted above, but in the absence of further data I have placed them in the same period, 1868 to 1870.

his basket is suspended: a sword, a rattle, a very limp doll and two watches, while it also contains a windmill, dolls and a hobby-horse. In his extra basket is a trumpet, a rattle, a puppet, a whip, noise-maker, tennis racket and two more watches.

The editor of the New-York Mirror had evidently hoped to present to his readers a steel engraving of Robert

C. Weir's painting of "St. Nicholas or Santa Claus" but was "disappointed by the artist" and instead "prevailed upon our friend Ingham to give us a sketch of him just as he saw . . . (the good old Saint) one bright, frosty moonlight night as he was returning home late from a party of friends."

In the Family Magazine, January 1841, Ingham's drawing, wood engraved by R. Roberts, was reprinted with an eloquent recalling of old-time Christmases:

"Good Reader! if you are a Knickerbocker, or the descendant of a Knickerbocker, we need not tell you that the jolly faced figure upon the chimney top in our frontispiece is your tutelar saint - the good St. Nicholas, alias Santa Claus, alias Sinter Claas. Ever since the 'Gude Wro' cast her anchor in the bay of Mannahatta, St. Nicholas has been the most beloved of all the saints to the inhabitants of Nieuw Amsterdam particularly to the 'rising generation.' Benevolence is his chief attribute; and for every one of his wards, whatever may be their condition in life, he has a smile and a Kroller, a doughnut or a thimble cake. But those Yankees interlopers of whom the good old Diederick so mournfully complained, have weaned the votaries of St. Nicholas from their true heartfelt affection; and those scenes of joy and festivity which characterized the season of his coming, have almost disappeared before the innovations of modern refinement."

"Well do we remember the joy with which, in boyhood, we burst from the thrall of the village pedagogue and hailed the Christmas morning as a time of jubilee indeed. With faith unshaken, the stocking was hung in the sooty chimney corner, and the pillow was pressed with a joyous assurance that a heterogeneous mass of blessings, of all sorts and sizes, colors, tastes and values, would greet our waking. Nor were boys and girls the only recipients of the joys of the Christmas holidays, but 'children of larger growth' laid aside the cares and duties of domestic life, and engaged heart and soul in the general merrymaking - the flail of the husbandman and the wheel of the spinner was silent - the hammer of the artisan and the needle of the seamstress were idle, and the jingle of the bells, the merry laugh, the song and story proclaimed a general gala-day at the court of the king of storms. At evening the trident candle illuminated the 'spare room' and nuts and cider prinkums and contra dances, pawns and riddles, bright eyes and rosy cheeks, like kindred drops were mingled into one."

This anonymous writer of 1841 would be astonished at how the celebration of Christmas and the coming of Santa Claus has grown steadily through the years and almost out of all proportion into the biggest festivity of the year and yet at the same time somehow has preserved the essential spirit of good-will and family life which he and the artists of his day so tellingly depicted.

Collectors would do well to purchase copies of the Family Magazine and the weekly, New York Mirror, whenever they come upon them. These publications are replete with woodcuts and engravings by our early artists which are invaluable to the students of American social history in the 1830's and 40's. The volumes of the "Poets of America" edited by John Keese and published by S. Colman of New York in 1840 are filled with delicate illustrations of poems that have become perennial favorites.

From the HOBBIES Family

you are told the worms are long dead . . . but do not be too sure, watch for the first "snow" of sawdust in small quantities around the piece and you will have plenty of uninvited guests in your other furniture. Best to spray with a very strong Aero Bomb the minute you get it, and let it stand for a day, then spray again.

Invariably, antiques here are priced the highest in the summer months. I have also found that in comparison with the prices that I, an American, pay IN THE HOME is three to four times less, than in the shops, even in the winter months. Seldom are the clocks found running.

In most cases, items are not marked and by actual experimenting I have found the following to be so. When I go into a shop, wearing my old rain clothes, the price of the clock, circa 1690, is 320 marks. When I go in, dressed "to the teeth" with my husband along, the price of the same clock may be 450 marks.

There exist, all over Germany, in the larger cities, second-hand stores and (of all things) junk yards . . . these two places are most times treasures to be searched. The junk yards sell by the penning (100 pennings make a mark, or $0.24) usually thirty or forty pennings a pound or Kilo. Here you can find old irons, wrought iron chandeliers, (candle-type), sconces, umbrella stands, costumers, very early brass or iron beds, for about $2.15 each . . . sometimes, old iron clocks or cases, coffee mills, etc.

The second-hand shops offer anything you can think of in the way of old furniture . . . and almost always, a few old grandfather clocks, if you don't want them older than 80 or 90 years.

Signs reading 'Verkaufslading Mobel' or "Antiquary Verkaufshandlung" . . . antiquary means second-hand and "Antik" means an antique.

The internationally famous shops get high prices in any weather. However, you may find some bargains in the musty little shops on the Right Bank . . . Left Bank ones may charge more for their impressive atmosphere, too.

Another good thing to search for in any large city is the Antique auction house. Almost without exception, they will sell to you, prior to auction time. The usual charge is 10 per cent to the house, over and above the cost of the item. Look in the city directories for these, as they are seldom listed in the telephone books.

So, HOBBIES, I hope the above will, in some way, help someone coming to Europe to seek, not only the antique shops, but work a little and dig out the unusual and actually get your money's worth.

Mrs. M. B. Goodwin

EDITOR'S NOTE: Mrs. Goodwin is the wife of an American army officer stationed in Europe. HOBBIES is proud to have on its subscription list, many military personnel at home and abroad.

FAVORITE PIONEER RECORDING ARTISTS

musical career in Scranton when she was only 14. One of the photos was taken in the music room of the singer's beautiful San Antonio home and another shows her in front of the house. "Here," say the cutlines, "some of the country's most famous celebrities have been entertained, among them General Pershing, Rosa Ponselle, Frances Nash, General John L. Hines and Major E. M. Lewis."

I find the following quotation from the magazine article especially appropriate to conclude with:

"In addition to her strictly professional work and duties Miss Jordan is a wonderfully well educated woman, being a profound student of history, biography and religious theology. To be a true artist one must know life from all angles. Her theory of success is that it is three-fourths hard work and one-fourth natural ability. 'Hard work is the master-key that unlocks every door' is one of her favorite self-coined quotations. 'Success did not come easy with me,' she confessed in a reminiscent mood. 'Of course, one must have a voice, next to that brains and good health, to sing. You must have the urge of genius or you will never get anywhere without work.'

Old Glass and China

MORNING GLORY REPRODUCTIONS

By RUTH WEBB LEE

One morning last summer, I received an anxious telephone call from a collector of the Sandwich glass pattern known as Morning Glory. He said he had just received two goblets from the South and they varied so much from those in his collection that he was suspicious. I asked if he could bring one over to my house together with one from his collection, which he did that afternoon. Upon comparing the two, we realized that there was bad news in store for collectors of this rare pattern, to say nothing of the dealers who would be caught by the reproductions.

However, it is comparatively easy to spot the fake. By rubbing your hand around the inside of the bowl, it will be noted that it has wavy-feeling bumps, or convexities, in the glass. The inside of the bowls of old goblets are perfectly smooth to the touch. Another simple way to identify the reproduction, is by examining the three leaves which extend along the foot. On the old, these leaves overlap the foot, so that in running your hand around the edge, they may be felt. In copies, these leaves merely run to the edge.

There are other variations between the old and new, but these differences would be almost impossible to detect unless you had an original and a copy side by side, for comparison. For instance, there is a variation in the size of the leaves, mainly in the width. The new ones are narrower. Several stems are also missing in the fake, most noticeably along the very top where a sort of arch formed by the stem, is broken. The height of the Morning Glory design, as it stands in relief, although not especially high in the originals, is still lower in the reproduction. The fake is heavier and thicker, and has no ring to the glass, although some of the old ones have very little, either. There is a difference in the shape of the goblets, too, as may be noted in the illustration. The old goblet measures 3-5/16" at the top, and the fake 3-3/16". The old is 5-15/16" high, the copy 6-1/16".

The distress at learning this rare pattern had been copied had begun to wane a bit, when I received a second call from a dealer in Rhode Island. She said she had an opportunity to buy a Morning Glory goblet and wine but she was fearful of them, since she specialized in furniture rather than glass. I told her I would be glad to examine them if she had time to bring them over. Later that day she came in, and sure enough, they were both new. I had not known about the wine. She said both pieces had been placed in an estate auction, to be sold!

Unfortunately, the wine is a better copy than the goblet. For one thing, the inside of the bowl is smooth, so that test will not apply. The leaves do not overlap the edge of the foot, as they should, but this error could easily be corrected by the company making the reproductions. Incidentally, the edge of the base of the foot on the wine brought in for me to examine, had been carefully ground, to create an appearance of age.

As may be noted in the illustration, there is a difference in the shape of the bowl in the reproduction wine, as it is not as rounded as in the original, and there is a difference in the shape of the foot. There is a little vine missing in the copy but this is not easily noted, even in examining the glass itself. Also, the Morning Glory design in the originals has an appearance of being more heavily stippled.

These reproductions made their appearance last Spring. They were put out by a jobber, who has pattern glass copies made by farming them out to a large glass company. The two copies of the goblet that were sent to the collector I mentioned at the beginning of the article, came to him from a dealer in the South, who apparently believed them to be old. As I recall the story, she said another dealer in her town purchased them from a man who came around in a station wagon. It never pays to buy in this way, from strangers. In New York City, dealers must obtain the name and address of those who bring in items to sell. Of course, in some instances these addresses have proved to be fictitious. Some peddlers of doubtful reputation who sell to country shops have been known to park their cars in such a way that their license plate numbers cannot be obtained.

John R. Stuart kindly lent his old Morning Glory goblet and wine so that this comparison could be made. Unfortunately, however, glass does not reproduce sufficiently well to show great detail. The fakes are at the left.

Dealers and collectors interested in buying Canary Lustre should also be on the alert these days. Quantities of old white china and even Soft Paste, are being coated with yellow and shipped into New York, from England. I am informed that a load of it was also shipped out West. The newly-coated wares are so clever, since the weight and the designs are perfect, that many experienced buyers of this type of lustre, have been fooled. The safest way to buy it is to carry a can of paint-remover around with you. A dab on the bases will soon tell the story. The yellow will not come off the genuine article.

DEATHS

OLIVE MILLS CLAUDY, widely known antiques dealer, passed away on September 27 at her home in Frankfort, Ind. She had been ill for several weeks.

Mrs. Claudy had been a collector and dealer nearly a quarter of a century. Her collection of antiques and discrimination with which she had stocked her shop had become famous throughout that whole countryside according to word from her neighbors and customers.

* * *

RUTH BRIGGS, antique dealer of Rockford, Ill., passed away recently. Miss Briggs had a well rounded career in the business and was favorably known far and wide in the Middle West. Many will remember her participation in the earlier Chicago Antiques Expositions and Hobby Fairs.

* * *

TOM ROBERTS of the Roberts Rock Shop, World's Antique Mart, Chicago, passed away on October 31 following a lingering illness. He was a most enthusiastic fan of the gems and mineral hobby. Mrs. Roberts, who carried on the business during her husband's illness, will continue.

* * *

ARTHUR JENNESS, Clinton, N.J., collector passed away a few months ago. He was a HOBBIES Magazine fan says Mrs. Jenness. His collection included three antique automobiles.

* * *

STANLEY COX of Ardmore, Okla., a friend and subscriber of HOBBIES for almost 25 years, passed away a few months ago. His sister, Mrs. Roy E. Perry, who informed us of this loss, writes that she plans to carry on the tradition in the family by continuing his yearly subscription to HOBBIES.

* * *

MRS. I. C. PARKER. Word has just reached HOBBIES Magazine also of the passing of Mrs. I. C. Parker of Tulsa, Okla., another long time friend.

LEROY HUGHBANKS of Osborne, Kans., died on September 28 at Concordia, Kans. He was best known for his experiments with the phonograph and radio, and for his two books which dealt with the phonograph, published some years ago. Blind from birth, Mr. Hughbanks surmounted his handicap. He taught in Kansas State School for the Blind, and later became an Episcopalian minister, and was a member of the American Meteorological Society and Kansas Academy of Science. He was buried in Forest Park Cemetery in Anthony, Kansas, on October 1.

Mrs. E. E. Shelly, Freeport, Ill., a devoted collector of antiques, is another from our ranks who passed away recently.

* * *

Mrs. Mabel J. Fulton, Malone, N.Y., an advertiser and subscriber to HOBBIES Magazine for a number of years passed away on September 23rd. Besides conducting an antiques business she was active in many civic affairs in her part of the state.

GAWTHROP. Mrs. Sadie Gawthrop, Galesburg, Ill., whose name is familiar to so many through her ads in HOBBIES, has had two visits from the Great Reaper within recent months. Her son Jack Wesley Gawthrop was killed in an automobile accident on May 29. He had served four years in the Air Force, and had returned home just three months previously. Two years of his service were spent in the Far East. On October 2, her husband, Harry M. Gawthrop, Sr., passed away following two major operations at University Hospital, Iowa City, Ia.

Mrs. Gawthrop's philosophical attitude is expressed in a recent letter to HOBBIES. Said she, "I am more fortunate than some, as I have one son and one daughter living. I am most grateful for this blessing." She also enclosed this quotation which may be of some comfort to others who have been recently bereaved:

When you come to the Red-Sea place in your life,

Any glass or china advertised in HOBBIES must be authentic. We do not accept advertisements from those wishing to sell reproductions. Advertisements placed here are with that understanding. Anyone using these columns for the sale of any but genuine, old glass and china is misrepresenting.

When in spite of all you can do,
There is no way 'round, there is no way back.
There is no other way but THROUGH:
Then know God with a soul serene,
the dark and the storm are gone.
God stills the wind, God stills the waves,
God says to your soul, "Go on! Go on!
Go on! GO ON!!!

WAYTE RAYMOND, noted numismatist, passed away in Roosevelt Hospital, New York City on September 23, after a long illness. He was noted as a coin dealer and publisher of many works on coins. In 1912 while he was a bank teller, he formed the United States Coin Co. From 1934 to 1946 he managed the coin department of the Scott Stamp & Coin Co.

He handled such famous coin collections as Ferrari, J. P. Morgan, W. W. C. Wilson, and others.

NOTES OF THE FALL, 1956,ANTIQUES EXPOSITION*25th Anniversary Year*Oct 28 — Nov. 1, Inc.

The show got off to an early start in mid-summer with practically all of the space taken by exhibitors by that time.

— o —

The Show was given further impetus on October 8, by the following proclamation issued and signed by Mayor Richard J. Daley of Chicago.

PROCLAMATION

WHEREAS, the 25th annual Chicago Antiques Exposition and Hobbies Fair, will be held in Chicago October 28 through November 1; and

WHEREAS, antique dealers, hobbyists and collectors from all over the country and our great metropolitan trading area will be visiting our city for the purpose of attending this event; and

WHEREAS, more than 100,000 Chicagoans and visitors from many other sections of our great country will be in attendance at this show;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Richard J. Daley, Mayor of the City of Chicago, do hereby proclaim the period from October 28 through November 1 as ANTIQUE WEEK IN CHICAGO, and call public attention to this occasion.

Dated this 8th day of October, A. D. 1956.

Richard J. Daley,

Mayor

— o —

This being the 25th anniversary year of HOBBIES Magazine (March 1931-March 1956), the dealers of the Show presented the editor, Pearl Ann Reeder, and the Staff of HOBBIES, with a beautiful basket of flowers, which included 25 roses, one for each year of the Magazine's existence. After short talks by Charles Marston, Show Manager, and I. Friedman of M. & I. Antiques, Mary Ann Dickey who has participated in all of the 25 years of the Show's existence in Chicago, pinned corsage gifts from the dealers on the distaff members of HOBBIES Magazine who were present at the ceremony.

Earl King, Hinsdale, Ill., and Miami, Fla., presided at the annual, informal breakfast ceremony, which has become a part of the show tradition since the death, in 1950, of the founder of the Show and HOBBIES Magazine, O. C. Lightner.

— o —

Many of the larger Mid-West cities that were well represented by HOBBIES subscribers in attendance, included: Minneapolis, St. Paul, Minn., Kansas City, and St. Louis, Mo.; South Bend, Ft. Wayne, Indianapolis, Terre Haute, Muncie, Evansville, Lafayette, Elkhart, Ind.; Des Moines, Sioux City, Cedar Rapids, Ia.; Cleveland, Dayton, Toledo, Columbus, and Newark, Ohio; Detroit, Flint, Lansing, Jackson, Benton Harbor, Kalamazoo, and St. Joseph, Mich.; Louisville, Paducah, and Lexington, Ky.; Milwaukee, Kenosha, Burlington, Oshkosh, Green Bay, and Racine, Wis.

All of the larger cities in Illinois were well represented, with attendance, of course, highest from suburban Chicago readers.

The Weather Man co-operated and brought perfect, sunny days for the occasion. Attendance reached an all-time high.

— o —

Dealers reported good buying which augurs well for the antiques business as a whole.

— o —

Lulu Perry Gunderson of Milwaukee, Ore., spanned the miles by air in order to be with old friends and to buy for her shop during Show Week. Many were the packages that the expressmen picked up for delivery to her far west shop.

— o —

Mrs. Thomas B. Teasdale, collector of St. Louis, Mo., came for the full week also. Her house is full of well chosen collectors' items, but she always manages to take packages home with her to enhance her collections.

— o —

Faith Graham Lamm, formerly of Minneapolis, but now a full fledged Washingtonian, combined a visit to the old home state and the show. She also bought for her Seattle shop.

— o —

L. C. Hegarty, Coalport, Pa., collector flew in to look for additions for his hobby of mechanical banks and old toys, and to greet friends.

— o —

Mr. and Mrs. L. L. Cameto of Oakland, Calif., combined a trip to the Show and to eastern points. Mr. Cameto is a collector of mechanical banks and old toys, and Mrs. Cameto is a collector of china and souvenir spoons. However, both are interested in all forms of antiques.

— o —

Dr. A. J. Joynt, collector of clocks and candlesticks of Waterloo, Ia., and Mrs. Joynt, came also to meet with (Continued on page 84)

News of the World's Antique Mart

VISITORS AT 1006 S. MICHIGAN

The Mart enjoyed a record attendance of dealers and collectors last month — many of them here for the Antiques Show at the Conrad Hilton Hotel. Typical of a few of the comments voiced by visitors were: "Wonderful place to shop." "What fun here! And such beautiful things to see and buy." "Most interesting." "We always come to the Mart." Hmmm—sounds like another good place to do your Christmas shopping.

* * *

Among friends who stopped in at the Mart and HOBBIES offices during the convention of the National Button Society held in Chicago during mid-October were:

Dr. Eleanore Arthur, Atlantic City, N. J.; Grace Welsh, Gracie's Antique Shop, Antioch, Ill.; Mrs. William S. Crawford, Latham, N. Y., Adah C. Bennett, Jamaica, Stony Brook, L. I., N. Y.; Mrs. Beryl Taylor, Charleston, Ill.; Mrs. Merton S. Harter, Ellenville, N. Y., L. Erwina Couse, author of "Button Classics," published by the Lightner Publishing Corp.

* * *

Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Lambier, elephant collectors of St. Louis, Mo., stopped to greet folks at 1006 S. Michigan recently. Their collection is one of the largest of its kind and includes many rarities, such as ones in lapis lazuli and rose quartz. They plan to add more unusual specimens and then give the collection to the Lightner Museum of Hobbies, where all may enjoy it.

Stan J. Malecki, Pound, Wis., stopped at the Mart and also at HOBBIES offices on the fifth floor of the Lightner Building, enroute to St. Augustine, where he will visit the Lightner Museum of Hobbies. Mr. Malecki presented his collection of cigar box tops — one thousand, all different — to the Museum. The collection is most colorful and artistic, for some of the best artists of their day designed the inside covers for the tops of cigar boxes. Presidents of various countries, prominent people, and historical figures are represented in this collection. Mr. Malecki is also working on another collection which he plans to present to the Lightner Museum.

From St. Augustine he plans a 6,000 mile trip, taking the southern route to the Pacific Coast, returning in the spring by the Northern route. Enroute, of course, he will add to his newest hobby. Who says collectors don't get a lot of fun out of life?

L. A. Johnson, Syracuse, N. Y., spent some time browsing through the Mart last month, visiting old friends among the dealers there, and also in HOBBIES offices on the fifth floor. Many of our readers will recall the interesting story which Mr. Johnson wrote for HOBBIES some time ago about his hobby of collecting material for his old time grocery store, which adjoined his big super market in Syracuse. Mr. Johnson sold out his business interests a few years ago, and is now retired to his hobby. In the meantime, he and Mrs. Johnson have traveled considerably here and abroad, and he now has a keener interest than ever in historical material.

Mr. Johnson unquestionably has one of the finest compilations of material extant on the history of marketing the various and sundry products that make up the vast field of foods, including advertisements and histories of the early big time grocerymen.

* * *

A. W. Pendergast of Terre Haute, Ind., made one of his periodic trips here last month. Mr. Pendergast is co-author of the book "Cigar Store Figures in American Folk Art," Lightner Publishing Corp., 1953.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON

On November 2, Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield announced the selection of five commemorative stamps to be included in the 1957 Stamp Program of the Department.

These include stamps honoring Alexander Hamilton on the 200th anniversary of his birth; the Coast and Geodetic Survey on the 150th anniversary of its establishment; and Oklahoma on the 50th anniversary of its admission to the Union.

A commemorative stamp honoring the School Teachers of America; and another commemorative stamp in the Wildlife series will also be issued.

The actual dates, places of first-day sale, and other details including designs and colors will be announced later.

"275th Anniversary—Founding of Bristol, Pa., 1681-1956." (Bristol Pennsylvania) October 14 through December 31, 1956.

"Sesquicentennial Discovery of 1806 Pikes Peak 1956." (Colorado Springs, Colorado) September 23 through December 31, 1956.

"Oklahoma Semi-Centennial Exposition June 14-July 7 Oklahoma City." (Oklahoma City, Oklahoma) January 1 through July 7, 1957.

"1857-1957 Lake Forest College Centennial." (Lake Forest, Illinois) January 2 through June 26, 1957.

In anticipation of the largest holiday mail volume in the history of the Post Office Department, the nation's chief "mailman", Postmaster General Arthur E. Summerfield outlined recently ten basic pointers for users of the mails to follow in order to assure prompt and safe delivery of their Christmas cards and gifts.

1. Address mail fully and clearly. Write legibly or print plainly. Where applicable, use zone numbers on the address and return address. Avoid using abbreviations which might confuse mail handlers.

2. Be certain that a return address is printed on the upper left hand corner of both Christmas cards and parcels. This will prevent any undelivered mail ending up in a "dead letter" office.

3. Do not enclose coins or hard objects of any kind in letters, without marking the envelope for hand stamping. High speed cancelling machines cannot process such letters, often jam and damage letters.

4. Do not mail cash in any Christmas gift. For safety's sake, use Postal Money Orders or checks.

5. Make sure parcels are well packed and securely wrapped in strong containers. Cushioning material, such as excelsior, shredded newspapers or tissue paper should be evenly and firmly placed on all sides of the Christmas gift. The carton should be wrapped in heavy paper and securely tied with strong twine.

6. Gifts of a delicate nature, such as glass, china, electrical appliances, radios and musical instruments, must be marked "Fragile" by the mailer. Food stuffs should be marked "Perishable" if subject to spoilage.

7. Insure parcels. Register letters of real value. Where only proof of delivery is required for letters of no intrinsic value use Certified Mail. Use Combination Mail where a letter or message — other than a gift tag — is to be enclosed inside a Christmas package.

8. Ask at any post office for the free pamphlet "Post Office Department Publication No. 3" which contains rates of postage and limits of size and weight for domestic mail. Another free pamphlet at post offices is entitled "Packaging and Wrapping Parcels For Mailing."

9. Mail Christmas cards and parcels early to avoid the last minute rush and waiting in line at the post office. The best times to avoid the last minute rush and waiting in line at the post office. The best times to avoid crowds at stamp windows in most post offices are before 10:00 A.M. and between 1:30 and 3:30 P.M.

10. Every postal employee is happy to answer questions on postal rules and regulations. Anyone with problems about mailing his Christmas parcels should avail himself of the opportunity of discussing the problems with postal employees, and take advantage of their experience.

NEW BUREAU PRECANCEL CATALOG ANNOUNCED

The Gunesch-Coda Standard Catalog of U.S. Bureau Issue Precancel Catalog which was issued a few months ago took the collectors fancy so that a second edition has had to be released.

The publisher is Richard J. Coda. Adolph Gunesch, who has bought and sold Bureau Precancels for 31 years, did the pricing.

It is an improvement over the first edition. The headings of both city and state names are in much larger print. The section group has been retained, that is, each stamp issue is printed on a different color of paper. For instance the Large Old Styles can be found on white pages, the Small Old Styles on yellow pages, etc. The Revenue Playing Cards have a section by themselves and are printed on the pink pages.

The price is retained at $1 per copy, and it may be obtained by writing Gunesch Precancel House, Inc., 30 W. Washington St., Chicago 2, Ill.

Help Fight TBBuy Christmas Seals*The 50th Christmas Seal Sale

In 1956, the tuberculosis associations are carrying on the 50th Christmas Seal Sale in the United States. The first sale of Christmas Seals was conducted in December 1907 by Miss Emily Bissell to raise funds for a small tuberculosis hospital in Wilmington, Del. Since that year, the Christmas Seal Sale has spread to every state and territory of the United States.

TEAMWORK AGAINST TB

The drive against tuberculosis in the United States is conducted by the U.S. Public Health Service, state and local health departments, and the voluntary associations affiliated with the National Tuberculosis Association.

The NTA has constituent associations in every state and a number of large cities.

The state associations have affiliated local associations which carry on tuberculosis control work within their city or county. Thus, there is a network of 3,000 voluntary tuberculosis associations across the country.

AMERICANA PAGE

Dedicated to the memory of the founder of H O B B I E S Magazine, O. C. Lightner, whose enthusiasm in spreading the cause of collecting and the cultural arts pertaining thereto, left us all a legacy of real beauty. By providing the means of bringing persons together under the mutual

O. C. LIGHTNER, Founder of HOBBIES Magazine

bond of collecting, he enriched thousands of lives with the formation of new and enduring friendships.

And since by his every act he deserved the encomium of one of his friends, "a real American," we dedicate this the AMERICANA PAGE.

Commemorative stamps have teased hundreds of millions of people into learning some things they did not know before. To some they have opened up whole new vistas of learning. These stamps are not mere pieces to be fitted into the puzzle of collections. They are intelligence teasers and information teasers for the general public.

A cancelled stamp is such an innocent looking and self-effacing visitor that it is permitted to make itself at home until, in some relaxed moment, the receiver permits himself a vague inquiry as to why that face or that design should have been printed on a stamp. From that point on who knows how far the person will be drawn into new inquiry on the history of a field of invention, discovery or science.

With labels on foods or drugs now taken largely for granted, who knows how many would survey and re-evaluate the whole problem of purity of food when glancing at that king size picture of Dr. Wiley on their recent letters. Who knows how much the face of Simon Bolivar floating about on both stamps and coins has had to do with the basic comprehension of democracy in South America and elsewhere.

Collection and assembly of stamps by subject matter rather than by geography and chronology, may be a field of increasing importance in the future. A bird's eye index of the far flung field of medicine is contained in the small booklet, Doctors Philatelic, recently published by the American Physician, Inc. The two or three hundred stamps pictured, parade rapidly before you the legend, philosophy, history, science, invention, discovery and sociology that has gone into the production of modern medicine. This is a method of collecting and presentation that should be extended to many other fields.

Modern metallurgy has been drawing a clear and unmistakable line between old pewter and new. In that way it tends to become a guarantor of the authenticity of old pewter. Gone is the heavy lead content and the heavy grey tarnish of pewter.

Modern ornate pewter is essentially tin with a minor trace of antimony and copper. It does not tarnish.

Early Americana spent much elbow grease on its pewter, keeping it shined up and as brilliant as possible. Collectors have to some extent followed the same practice in order to bring out the greater brilliance of the choice pieces. Perhaps the brilliant polish of modern pewter will tend to put a premium on the tarnish of old pewter, and collectors will be happy to accept the quiet gray of the antique.

—o—

When Ringling hauled down the last Big Top in midsummer this year a slowly waning star of Americana went into total eclipse. The Big Top was born with the birth of the chuffing, panting, coal burning railroad locomotive, and slowly sickened and gave up the ghost under the flashing wheels of the automobile and the searching eye of the television camera scanning every nook and cranny of the world for something different.

Eighty-five years of kaleidoscopic transition from Americana have passed since P. T. Barnum launched his first Big Top, just two years after railroads spanned the continent. "Red Wheels" had been traveling the dusty roads of Americana, with perhaps a lion or a tiger in the horse drawn wagons, long before the time of Barnum. But the railroad days found the man with the chair and the whip in a large cage with many wild cats. Elephants, zebras, giraffe, lions, tigers and the rest were paraded down Main Street in Podunk before the eyes of children, hanging on to the hand of papa or mamma, and seeing the impossible for the first time. Wild West riders brought the "rodeo" for the first time into settled, solemn eastern states and the cornbelt. And came the clowns, the heart of the circus, completing the fantasy of what was already fantastic.

We do not fear loss of the talents of the circus. Those talents are all so fundamental in any age and clime that every one of them has a job for the future. We do fear the loss of the circus family, the circus clan, the circus esprit de corps, that atmosphere handed down from generation to generation under the Big Top. We have sat with theatrical groups off Broadway and elsewhere. We have sat with members of the Showman's Club of San Antonio, of Florida, and elsewhere. Nowhere in the world of entertainment is there such a cohesive atmosphere as we found among the sons and daughters of the Big Top.

This publication is vitally concerned with the preservation of the relics and the exact history of Americana. We believe, as the last Big Top is folded away that the sons and daughters of the Big Top will effect some plan in their organizational work, to preserve the history, the spirit, the team work and the "individual belonging" of the traveling circus.

—o—

"Yet, in the night of death, hope sees a star; and listening love can hear the rustle of a wing." Perhaps in this great sentence by the greatest orator of Americana is to be found the key to religious tolerance in Americana, and in the America of today. Many religious zealots of his day, who had ascribed horns and a tail to Robert G. Ingersoll, saw in this statement a final weak breakdown at the grave of his brother. We see in it the great basic tolerance of Americana that avoided the strife and confusion of bigotry that had long confounded Europe and Asia.

In the days of "hell, fire and damnation" sermons in Protestant Americana there was great emphasis on details between the militant sects. Into the heat of this confusion stepped Ingersoll, the agnostic on history and details, but conformist on general principles of Christian teaching. With impudent "Sacrilegion" this so-called "infidel" with rapier wit stabbed and mangled the most sacred details of all the warring sects. They forgot to fight each other in the common cause to destroy this "infidel" in their midst.

Americana stuck tenaciously to its basic principles of religion, but secretly enjoyed the melee over sectarian details.

Thus, in part, did the Melting Pot of Americana hurdle the problem of religious bigotry.

25th Anniversary Year

ANNIVERSARY THOUGHTS

WE'VE KNOWN EACH OTHER A LONG TIME!

Massachusetts—Although I have only been a subscriber for ten or eleven years, I saw HOBBIES for the ten years before, so feel I am really an "old timer" for the magazine. Good Luck.—Lina G. Gray.

IN 25 YEARS IT WILL BE 1981

Indiana—Thank you for reminding me that my renewal was due. I would hate to miss one copy. Hope we can celebrate your 50th anniversary together.—Mrs. K. W. Krauss

GEORGE, HOW DO YOU MEAN THIS?

California—Herewith find my renewal for another year. This makes 24 years. Subscribing to HOBBIES is "like making love to a widow; you can't overdo it."—George O. Mehl.

WELL SAID

Connecticut—Like fine wine (or tougher spirits, too, if you prescribe to it), I find HOBBIES steadily growing mellower and richer with age, and a medium of great good in this agitated world.—Arthur Gabler

VENUS—THE GODDESS OF LOVE

Indiana—HOBBIES Magazine, to me at least, is the Venus among magazines. Happy anniversary year to all who make up this stimulating magazine, the staff, subscribers and advertisers.—R. V. Graham.

THIS HAS BEEN A WONDERFUL GIFT YEAR! THANKS, ALL!

California—I am enjoying "HOBBIES" to the fullest and wish others to have the pleasure I am enjoying so I am enclosing a check for $3.50 for one year's subscription for a friend. I hope you will start with the current issue as there are so many things of interest to both my friend and her husband in this issue. I am enclosing a stamped envelope and card I hope you will mail from there for me after enclosing the gift card. Thank you. — Mrs. James Brown.

BOUQUET FOR ADVERTISERS

Arizona—Enclosed find subscription for another year of HOBBIES. I simply couldn't do without it. I absorb every word from cover to finish. Can't hardly wait from month to month for the new issue. I not only learn valuable knowledge about antiques, but also where to buy them. I find HOBBIES advertisers to be fair, and honest, and wonderful to deal with. Yours for continued success.—Laura J. Fuquay.

A DEVOTED FAMILY

Ohio—It is good to belong to this nice family of HOBBIES readers and have a visit with them every month. We look forward monthly to this event and would not, for anything, think of not having this visitor. We believe the magazine grows better with each issue. Wishing all a merry and happy 25th anniversary year.—Henry Chisman

FROM O. C. LIGHTNER'S PUBLISHER'S PAGE.

During the Fair (World's Fair in Chicago, 1933), many hundred people had occasion to tell me personally how much they enjoyed this page. We have often wondered whether we lose more subscriptions through it than we gain. However as long as we keep gaining steadily we think we have a shade the best of it. Maybe the magazine succeeds in spite of the "Publisher's Page."

I don't like the policy of my favorite newspaper. I disagree with it at most times and yet I read it constantly because I recognize that it is a splendid newspaper and I would be hurting myself more than the newspaper by doing without it. The time was that a Democrat would not advertise in a Republican newspaper and vice versa. Today a merchant doesn't care whether a newspaper is Republican or Democrat. If it draws business to his store he will buy its advertising space. The folks are about all dead who stopped their subscriptions to a paper because they saw something in it that they did not agree with.

—o—

The people in Portland, Ore., have started a mighty good movement that ought to spread. They are urging Uncle Sam to deed them the old post office building for a museum. Now that new post offices are being built in many cities under the Recovery Act, splendid edifices will be available. Many times these old post offices are classic and built to last 500 years. It is a shame to wreck them. Every reader of HOBBIES should get busy, and call a meeting of the collectors in his town, and get his congressman to go to the front and obtain the local building, if it is to be abandoned, for a museum. People are going to have time in the future to visit museums and every American city is now old enough to have a history which should be preserved.

SOME REMINISCENCES

Florida—I believe I am among your earliest subscribers, as I started taking HOBBIES shortly after Mr. Lightner consolidated some smaller magazines into one and started the new format. Actually, like so many others, I am a great booster for it, because therein I procure much information, necessary in my line of endeavor. The Lightner Museum of Hobbies in St. Augustine has a good man in Cecil Zinkan. Spent a few hours with him about three years ago. Like many newspaper men he seems to have the ability to fill admirably the job as manager, and to keep the situation well in hand. I used to think when Mr. Lightner was alive and writing his Publisher's Page, that he was sometimes gazing at the wrong crystal ball, but as things work out in these later years, politically and nationally, how right that chap was. He was a seer par excellence!—Alfred E. Newman.

TO THE NEW YEAR

Ohio—Thanks, for everything the past year. And let's hope for everything good for all of us this coming 1957. — Mrs. L. Morton.

MEMBER OF TWENTY YEAR CLUB

The United States lent the State of Minas Geraes $16,000,000. Like all countries, great and small, they are in default. Will any of you stamp collectors who are geographical specialists tell us where Minas Geraes is? We never heard of it. If we can find out where it is maybe we can go there this winter and collect that money.

Numismatics

Money of Yesteryear

By CHARLES FRENCH

At the present time, Mrs. French and I are in the midst of cataloging our 63rd auction sale of rare coins and paper money. It takes a good amount of time and care to catalog a sale. Most of ours now run more than 50,000 items, and our last sale which was run in conjunction with the Middle Atlantic Numismatic Association Convention held in Richmond, Va., had an estimated valuation of around $31,000.

Accuracy is imperative, for the printing of such a catalog is quite expensive. If we err, the successful bidder will most assuredly return the incorrect lot, and rightly so. But this means the lot has been unsold, and printing costs upon it still have to be paid. Therefore we are careful and conservative, as much as is humanly possible. It takes a considerable time to complete a sales catalog; it takes at least a month for the printer to linotype the catalog, print it, and send it out, (we, of course do the addressing in our office).

In the right hand column, it has been our practice to place an estimated valuation of each lot, but since several months elapse between cataloging and getting the catalog into the hands of the bidders, present day rapid price rises of many items are making these estimates too low. We have endeavored to offset this by making a note of it in our "terms of sale" in the forward part of the catalog.

We wonder how long this price rise will continue? We do not believe anything like it has ever occurred in the history of Numismatics. All coins of any Numismatic interest are rising by leaps and bounds. There are some dealers that at present will purchase choice proofs at full catalog, knowing that simply by holding them a couple of years, they will rise in value to a point where a nice profit can be realized. And we all know that choice proofs are one of the most desirable types of coins one can have. With such a situation, it is hard for Mr. Collector to secure such coins without paying top dollar in the market of today, but then, if he does, it is pretty certain that he will be able to realize a handsome profit on them in a very few years, having had the enjoyment of the coins in the meantime.

There are those who feel that celebrated great rarities are still, very low in value. They give, as an example, the prices realized for rare paintings, objects of art, and stamps in comparison to similarly rare coins. Should this be the case, even the rarest coins should be selling for ten times what they are today. The celebrated 1804 dollar which records, at the present time a valuation of $12,500, if put up for sale today should bring a good deal more than that and if compared to stamps of similar rarity, could very well reach a valuation of $125,000. There are only four varieties of the gold pattern $4 "Stella." The commonest 1879 with flowing hair records 415 pieces coined and at present catalogs at $1,050, in proof condition, of course. But the 1879 variety with coiled hair of which there were only ten coined, the 1880 with flowing hair of which there were fifteen coined and the 1880 coiled hair of which there were only ten coined catalog at $1,750, $1,400, and $1,850 respectively. It is easy to see that these three last excessively rare varieties would be better priced at ten times that amount. The recorded quantities of each of these makes them as rare as the afore mentioned 1804 dollar.

When one examines past records of the auction sales that contained great rarities, it can be seen that such coins consistently rise in value and it is my opinion that the fact that they have not come up for sale in the last couple of years is the reason that they have not reached fabulously new high prices. If one has the money, investment in great rarities would be one of the greatest profit makers one could indulge in. It is not unwise to pay a record price for them for they are certainly worth it.

Orders for Proof Sets at the mint have gotten so large that the deadline for ordering has been pushed up to July 30. In other words, one can no longer get 1956 proof sets from them. What does this mean? Those that still want them will now have to go out into the open market to purchase them and the demand is great. Outcome? Up will go the prices. In addition, I understand the mint is increasing the cost of them 25¢, so that they will sell for $2.35 instead of $2.10. I believe it is estimated that there will be half a million 1956 proof sets. Is it too many? Who knows? Will they rise in value like other years have? Most likely! What will be the outcome of the value of other proof set years? I feel that as long as the speculators have an interest in them they will continue to rise.

Rumor has it that the Mint in Philadelphia is contemplating closing for the coining of regular coinage the middle of 1958. It is felt that the Denver mint can now supply United States demands for new coins and the Philadelphia mint plans to operate only to supply Proof Sets and strike Foreign coins, that are being ordered there in increasing numbers. If this comes about, a close watch on the coinage records for the year 1958 should be kept. It might also be advisable to watch the 1957 coinage, for such a lack of demand can cause a reduction in the quantities struck and create rarities. This is beginning to be evident with the 1956 P half dollars. The coinage record is very low.

COIN QUIZ

By CHARLES FRENCH

Coin questions answered for 25c per letter to help defray costs. Do not mail us coins in question.

Question:

Could you please inform me if any of the following pieces have value above face? 1. A 2½ dollar gold piece of 1925? 2. A U. S. 10¢ piece paper money dated 1874? 3. A U. S. 3¢ piece dated 1865? I also have the following from Canada. 1. Paper money, 25¢, dated January 2, 1900. 2. Silver, 25¢, dated July 2, 1923. 3. A 5¢ piece dated 1918. 4. A large 1¢ piece dated 1912.

—Mrs. G. M., Washington

Answer:

Your coins are worth, if sold to dealers, the following:

1925, $2.50 — $5.00.

1874, 10¢ note, good condition 25¢.

1865, 3¢, good condition 8¢.

The Canadian coins in used condition demand no premium.

And the paper 25¢ bill must be crisp new, unfolded to demand a premium.

—C. F., New York

Question:

Please tell me the value of a half dollar dated 1795 in good condition as this rubbing will show.

—C. T., Tenn.

Answer:

The 1795 half dollar you have in good condition is valued at $7.50. However the pencil rubbing seems to indicate that the coin might be in better than "good" condition and if so would be worth more.

Question:

I have a 1909 Lincoln cent with VDB on edge of back of coin. In God We Trust and E Pluribus Unum very clear, but figure of Lincoln worn. Liberty clear. Any value? Also half penny bank token, date 1850. Bank of Upper Canada. Coat-of-Arms one side, man on flying horse on other. Excellent condition. Copper. What, if any value? One penny, 1860, Victoria D.G. Britt. Reg. F.D. bust of Queen Victoria. Copper. Worn. One shilling, excellent condition, 1852, Victoria Del Gratia, Britannias, Reg. F.D. Un sol, 1892, perfect condition (a beautiful coin) Firme Y Felez Por La Union, seated Female on face. Republica Pecuana Lima 9 Decimos Fino T.F. on back. What's it worth? Enjoy your monthly columns.

—M. J. L., Wisconsin

Answer:

The Lincoln cent in used condition is very common; the one valuable being a 1909 VDB with a small "S" under the date.

The Canadian bank token is very common being worth about 10¢; the worn English penny worth ½¢; the shilling 1852, 10¢; the Peruvian sol 1892, 75¢.

—C. F., New York

Question:

I recently acquired a 1907 ten dollar gold coin and upon looking it up in Whitman's handbook I find there were three types for that year: namely regular issue; wire edged, periods in legend; and rolled edges, periods in legend. What is the legend on a gold coin and where are these periods? I also purchased a gold-backed note but cannot find any guide to its possible value as a collector's item. Why isn't a price guide listed for gold-backed notes?

—J. E. D., Vermont

Answer:

The gold back note is not listed, because all of these were supposed to be turned in to the government at face value.

The periods appear on the St. Gaudens, Type 1907, Eagle and not the Liberty Head. The legends referred to are "United States of America" and "Ten Dollars" and the periods appear before and after these.

—C. F., New York

Question:

Will you please write me if any of the dates of the Roosevelt dimes are worth more than face value? Are any of the Franklin or Liberty Bell halves worth any more than face value? I have a Confederate States of America $5.00 note of April 6, 1864, also a $20.00 one of February 17, 1864. I also have 2 United States 10¢ paper notes and one United States 25¢ notes. Also 2 Dominion of Canada 25¢ notes. Are any of them worth more than face value?

—Mrs. O. E. K., Michigan

Answer:

There is a premium on some dates and varieties of Roosevelt dimes and Franklin halves, but only if they are in brilliant, uncirculated condition. Any out of circulation demand no premium. The ones that do demand a premium are usually dealt with by the roll and not as single pieces.

The paper money you have ranges in value from 25¢ to 50¢ per note.

—C. F., New York

Question:

I am a new subscriber to HOBBIES, and interested in your coin column. I would like information on the following coins. A number of 2-cent pieces in various condition, dates running from 1864 to 1872. Three-cent pieces, some good condition, dates running 1852 to 1881. Dime of 1834, 1853-1890. Half dime with arrows 1853 to 1854. 25¢ piece

Answer:

From what I can gather from your letter you wish an itemized listing of the values of all coins in all types of conditions. This would take quite a bit of room, and I would like to suggest that you purchase Whitman's Handbook of United States Coins ($1.00 plus 10¢ postage) that will list most of these pieces.

The two Civil War tokens of 1864 are worth around 10¢ each.

—C. F., New York

Question:

I have come upon an 1820 (only last 2 digits visible) large Liberty Head, 1-cent piece. On the obverse side are stamped the initials "A.R." Could you please tell what they stand for and the origin of them? Please also tell me the value of the coin at wholesale price when the coin is in fair condition. Please suggest a way to remove a large amount of corrosion from a coin without damage to the coin.

—C. J., New York

Answer:

Most likely, the AR counterstamp was done by some person and should be considered a mutilation. I regret that there is no way of removing the heavy corrosion. The piece is too far gone. And as such worth very little. Good specimens of this coin can be purchased for 50¢ to $1.00.

—C. F., New York

Question:

Inclosed is a picture of a coin I possess. The picture comes from HOBBIES Magazine, February, 1954. It is the same except for the date as my coin, dated 1806. What is its value?

—M. S., New Jersey

Answer:

The cent you have is valued according to condition. If it was in the exact condition as the coin illustrated it would be classified as Very Fine and an 1806 would be around $15 in this condition. However, classification as to condition is a very specialized subject and an expert would have to inspect the coin to determine its exact condition. A coin of that date in "good" condition would only be worth $1.00.

—C. F., New York

Question:

I've lots of coins including about 75 3-cent pieces, 125 large cents, complete Lincoln set from 1909 S.V.D.B. to 1942 with 3 extra 1914 D's among them. The enclosed rubbings are coins in very fine condition but I'm not too good at the rubbing business. Any tips? I'd like the coins identified with their approximate value. Also have 1901 S dime, 1904 S, 1912 S, 1913 S, 1914 S, 1921 plain, 1924 S, D, 1927 S, D, 1926 S, D, most all in fine condition. Give values if it is not much trouble. I also have 3, 1917 S halves with the S on the obverse, also 1, 1916 with D on obverse. Enclosed are 2 commemorative stamps which maybe you save. Have also 1799 farthing in good condition. 1917 Liberty Standing quarters, type one, about 6 of them, and 1 type two in very fine condition. 1918 S quarter; 1920 S, 1918 and 1920 plain, others too numerous to mention. Any information will be appreciated. You can print all or part of this if you want or just send me the answers as you see fit.

—T. L. S., New York

Answer:

We are enclosing you pencil rubbings with information. As to the other coins you have, condition would determine their value. 1909S VDB and 1914Ds are worth good premiums in all conditions.

Mostly about Books

Short Shorts

By RAYMOND J. WALKER

In the search for material for articles on books and back number magazines we often run across literary tidbits that are not of sufficient length to use for an article but yet are too interesting to be left in our files. Here we have gathered a number of these short articles and are presenting them in the hope that they will interest our book and magazine collectors and give them a clue to some of the finds that have been made by collectors in recent years and other items of literary interest.

George Brinley, Collector of Americana

George Brinley of Hartford, Conn., was one of the earliest collectors of Americana. He was born in Connecticut on May 17, 1817, the son of a former Boston merchant, and it is believed that the fact that the Brinleys of Massachusetts were loyalists during the American Revolution was the reason for the prejudice that Brinley often showed against Boston throughout his life. His mother was Katherine Putnam, a granddaughter of General Israel Putnam.

Brinley at the age of 28, in 1845, purchased the entire library of Samuel G. Drake, also a famous antiquarian, whose Indians of North America is still a work of great value covering the Indians who came in contact with the early colonists of New England and the settlers of the Northwest Territory. Brinley in his collecting considered that Americana should not only cover the original American colonies but include the West Indies and the Far West. He included the first Detroit Directory of 1837 and the St. Louis Directories for 1842, 1847 and 1848.

Randolph G. Adams in his work "Three Americanists" writes of Harrisse, Brinley and Jefferson, and tells us that Brinley was a pathfinder among collectors of his era and that his collection contained ten of the first twenty-five items described in Henry R. Wagner's bibliography "The Plains and the Rockies," and among later items described by Wagner, Brinley had such items as Weth's "Oregon," Palmer's "Rocky Mountains" and Gregg's "Commerce of the Prairies," all rare collector's items today.

Adams wrote: "In building up a great library, there are at least two methods of acquiring books. One is to go directly to the source, the attic, the cellar, or the old family library where the book has been hidden. The other is to put your trust in the great book dealers. Brinley used both methods."

Brinley traveled around the country visiting farms, court-houses and school houses. He posed as the representative of an agricultural paper and exchanged tinware and skillets for old books and pamphlets. Carl L. Cannon in his "American Book Collectors" tells us that "like all first class collectors Brinley had an accurate memory for titles, dates and authors but more than this he had an uncanny way of carrying in his head the imperfections of books and pamphlets in his possession and of booksellers. He would stand before a huge pile of printed matter of all descriptions and run through it with incredible rapidity picking out signatures, maps, fly leaves, title pages, wrappers or anything else needed to complete his own or a cheap but defective copy elsewhere."

The Brinley collection was dispersed in five auction sales, each in several sessions, in the years from 1879 to 1893. It was the first great book sale in the United States and one of the greatest sales of Americana ever held. The earlier sales were held in New York and the final one in Boston in 1893. There were 9,500 lots which brought a total of $127,138.12. Joseph Sabin, the greatest bibliographer of Americana, acted as auctioneer at some of these sessions. It is believed that the items in the Brinley collection might bring as much as a million and a half dollars if offered today.

The collection was catalogued by James Hammond Trumbull and Francis G. Gay. Trumbull had been a rare book counsellor of Brinley and he catalogued the first four volumes and Gay, a Hartford librarian, produced the fifth volume. The index, a formidable one, was compiled by William I. Fletcher, librarian of Amherst College. Trumbull was an antiquarian, historian and philologist who is known for his, "Natick Dictionary" and his refutation of Bishop Peter's "General History of Connecticut" and the "forged" Blue Laws.

Connecticut Blue Laws

To be "blue" was to be "puritanic" and we find the phrase in use in the English literature as "Presbyterian blue." To be "blue" was to be precise in the observance of legal and religious obligations, rigid, gloomy, over-strict, in a word to be in morals and manners the very opposite of the cavalier, courtier, gallant and wit of the time.

"Blue Laws" are commonly believed to be the peculiar property of Connecticut, however, laws of the type classified as "blue" can be found in the codes of most of the British American colonies.

It was Samuel Butler in "Hudibras" who coined the phrase "true blue" and he was the great baiter of Puritans and the Roundheads who followed Oliver Cromwell. In a way "blue" was a term of reproach for certain people and equivalent to our modern "square."

Parson Peters, a Tory, was the promulgator of the "false" Blue Laws of Connecticut which James Hammond Trumbull called forgeries. Samuel M. Schmucker wrote of the Connecticut Blue Laws as being "Quaint and blunt," to which Trumbull replied that they were so in relation to our time but not in relation to their own time. Trumbull said that in penal reform New England was at least a century in advance of England.

Samuel Peters in his "General History of Connecticut," printed in 1781, gave a resume of the Blue Laws of the colony. Trumbull said he was a victim of "pseudomania" and that Peters' abhorrence of the truth was a disease.

Among the laws listed by Peters were that "no priest shall abide in the Dominion (Connecticut); he shall be banished, and suffer death on his return," etc. "No one shall run on the Sabbath day, or walk in the garden or elsewhere, except reverently to and from meeting." Travel, cooking, and making of beds on the Sabbath were banned as were sweeping the house, cutting hair, shaving, etc. One could not kiss his own child on the Sabbath. Reading Common Prayer, keeping Christmas or saint's days were also banned as were the making of mince pies and the playing at cards. The drum, the trumpet and the jew's-harp were the only musical instruments permitted, according to Peters. And "every male shall have his hair cut round according to a cap. (Roundhead). If a cap was not handy they used the hard shell of a pumpkin. (Pumpkinhead).

For those who are interested in the early laws of Connecticut there are copies of the early statutes preserved in our libraries. There are editions printed by Timothy Green, official printer, in 1715 and 1716 at New London and the index shows the following curiosities: Apparel of One Sex not to be Worn by the Other; Indians Not to Pass in the Night; Lying (to the detriment of the public) to be punished by sitting in the stocks; Lascivious Carriage (still a popular legal phrase in Connecticut); Night Walking; Tiplers, etc.

Heretics are defined as Quakers, Ranters, Adamites, or such like, etc. They were to be given no necessary entertainment. No one but the governor, magistrates or elders were to keep any Quaker books or manuscripts; and no master of a ship was to "Land such Hereticks in the Colony." Later these acts were repealed as far as Quakers were concerned.

In 1919, Albert C. Bates, a Connecticut historian, published "Acts & Laws of His Majesty's Colony of Connecticut—Passed by the General Assembly May 1716 to May 1749." This publication was limited to thirty sets and the plates were destroyed. It consisted of 346 pages—plus an eight page index. Bates asked a dollar a page and four dollars for the index, or $350 for each volume. Recently a complete copy was offered for $200.

Early New London Imprint

Ezra Stiles of Yale wrote a funeral oration in Latin on the death of John Law a colonial governor of Connecticut: "Oratio funebis pro . . . Jonathan Law (by) Ezra Stiles, New London, 1751, small quarto, pages (4) 12 (3). Recently this oration was offered with a poem consisting of pages (4) 8 bound in. This is the poem on the death of Law listed by Evans as 6651 and it is attributed to Benjamin Church. However, Wegelin gives in "Early American Poetry" 218 gives John Hubbard as the author. Trumbull 12549 lists this poem as a Connecticut imprint but does not locate the place.

The oration is listed by Evans as 6789 and by Trumbull as 1419. The (Continued on page 124)

AUTOGRAPHS

"Twas the night before Christmas, when all through the house
 Not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse;
 The stockings were hung by the chimney with care,
 In hopes that St. Nicholas soon would be there;
 The children were nestled all snug in their beds,
 While visions of sugar-plums danced in their heads;
 And mamma in her 'kerchief, and I in my cap,
 Had just settled our brains for a long winter's nap;
 When out on the lawn there arose such a clatter,
 I sprang from the bed to see what it was that made the matter;
 Away to the window I flew like a flash,
 Tore open the shutters and threw up the sash.
 The moon, on the breast of the new-fallen snow,
 Gave the luster of mid-day to objects below;
 When what to my wondering eyes should appear,
 But a miniature sleigh, and eight tiny reindeer,
 With a little old driver, so lively and quick,
 I knew in a moment it must be St. Nick;
 More rapid than eagles his coursers they came,
 And he whistled, and shouted, and called them by name:
 "Now, Dasher! now, Dancer! now, Prance and Shiner!
 On, Comet! on, Cupid! on, Donder and Blitzen!
 To the top of the porch! to the top of the wall!
 Now dash away! dash away! dash away all!"

(1) dry leaves that before the wild hurricane-fly,
 When they meet with an obstacle, mount to the sky;
 So up to the house-top the coursers they flew;
 With the sleigh full of Toys, and St. Nicholas too.
 And then, in a twinkling, I heard on the roof
 The prancing and pouncing of each little hoof —
 As I drew in my head, and was turning around,
 Down the chimney, St. Nicholas came with a bound.
 He was dressed all in fur, from his head to his foot,
 And his clothes were all tarnished with ashes and soot;
 A bundle of Toys he had flung on his back,
 And he look'd like a pedlar just opening his pack.
 His eyes — how they twinkled! his dimples how merry!
 His cheeks were like roses, his nose like a cherry!
 His drill little mouth was drawn up like a bow,
 And the beard of his chin was as white as the snow;
 The shrimps of a pipe he held tight in his teeth,
 And the smoke it smirched his head like a wreath;
 He had a broad face and a little round belly
 That shook, when he laughed, like a bowl full of jelly.
 He sprang chubby and plump, a right jolly old elf.
 And I laughed, when I saw him, in spite of myself;
 A wink of his eye and a twist of his head,
 Soon gave me to know I had nothing to dread;

He spoke not a word, but went straight to his work,
 And fill'd all the stockings; then turned with a jerk,
 And laying his finger aside of his nose,
 And giving a nod, up the chimney he rose;
 He sprang to his sleigh, to his team gave a whistle,
 And away they all flew like the down of a thistle.
 But I heard him exclaim, as he drove out of sight,
 "Happy Christmas to all, and to all a good night."

"A Visit From St. Nicholas"

By DORIS H. HAMILTON

While it might be difficult—without any advance warning—to name a favorite piece of literature associated with New Year's Day or Thanksgiving, I am sure that most of us could reply immediately to a query as to our favorite Christmas story or poem. My first choice would be O. Henry's story, "The Gift of the Magi", but in my next breath I would say, "Twas the Night Before Christmas", or more correctly, "A Visit from St. Nicholas."

This poem was written, not by a professional writer of children's poems or folklore, but rather by a professor of Oriental and Greek literature at General Theological Seminary in New York, Dr. Clement C. Moore. A graduate of Columbia University, Class of 1798, Dr. Moore was also the author of the formidable sounding tomes: A Compendious Lexicon of the Hebrew Language in Two Volumes.

According to one of Dr. Moore's letters, the poem was composed on Christmas Eve, 1822. His wife was preparing some Christmas baskets for the poor and found that she needed an additional turkey. Dr. Moore went to the market, purchased the bird, and on his way home along the moonlit, snowy streets, he conjured up the vision of St. Nicholas. Upon arriving home, he went to his study, wrote out the account of St. Nicholas' visit as a present for his two daughters, and read it to them on Christmas Eve.

To old St. Nicholas, the legendary giver of unexpected gifts, Dr. Moore added a sleigh and the reindeer. The physical appearance of the Saint himself was suggested by a round and ruddy Dutchman who lived near Dr. Moore's family country home.

It is believed that the poem was copied by a relative of Dr. Moore in her album. A copy was then made by Miss Harriet Butler of Troy, N. Y., with Dr. Moore's consent. Without Dr. Moore's consent, however, Miss Butler sent the poem to the editor of the Troy Sentinel where it was published anonymously on December 23, 1823. A copy of the newspaper was sent to Dr. Moore and he was not the least bit amused that the poem which he had written for his children was printed. In 1829 the Sentinel's editor acknowledged that the poem was written by a gentleman from the City of New York. In 1837, it was included in The New York Book of Poetry, but the author's name was not given. In 1838, Dr. Moore publicly admitted authorship in another Troy paper, The Budget, and included it in his collected poems in 1844.

Although it is not known what happened to the original manuscript written on Christmas Eve, 1822, Dr. Moore did make a few copies of his famous poem. The copies which I have traced are:

1. The New-York Historical Society copy
2. The W. K. Bixby copy
3. The Shanghai copy.

The New-York Historical Society is justifiably proud of its copy, not only because it is a very beautiful one, but also because the Society had the foresight to ask Dr. Moore to write out a copy. Bound in with the three-page quarto manuscript is a letter of transmittal by T. W. C. Moore to George H. Moore, Librarian of The New-York Historical Society. He writes on March 15, 1862:

"I have the pleasure to inform you that Doctor Clement C. Moore has been so kind as to comply with my request (made at your suggestion) to furnish for the Archives of our Society, an Autograph copy of his justly celebrated 'Visit from St. Nicholas'. I now enclose it to you."

"I hardly need call your attention to the distinctness and beauty of his handwriting;—very remarkable considering his advanced age, (he completed his 82nd year in July last) and his much impaired eye sight.

"These Lines were composed for his two daughters, as a Christmas present, about 40 years ago. They were copied by a relative of Dr. Moore's in her album, from which a copy was made by a friend of hers, from Troy, and, much to the surprise of the Author, were published (for the first time) in a newspaper of that City. "In an interview that I had yesterday with Dr. Moore, he told me that a portly, rubicund Dutchman, living in the neighborhood of his father's country seat, Chelsea, suggested to him the idea of making St. Nicholas the hero of this 'Christmas piece' for his children."

The second copy was owned at one time by W. K. Bixby, a famous book collector in St. Louis. In 1918, Mr. and Mrs. Bixby used a facsimile of their copy of "A Visit from St. Nicholas" as a Christmas greeting. The Bixby facsimile was preceded by a letter of transmittal dated March 24, 1856, in which Dr. Moore stated: "I have received your letter of the 16th instant. I wish the enclosed was more worthy of attention . . ." Upon Mr. Bixby's death several years later, his collection of books and manuscripts was sold—but Dr. Moore's poem was not included in the sale.

In both the Bixby and The New-York Historical Society manuscripts the last line, "Happy Christmas to all, and to all a good night," is underscored.

The third copy turned up many years ago in Shanghai. It was offered to a Boston dealer who promptly purchased it, then sold it to a Philadelphia collector. It is now owned by a New York collector. This is doubtless the most traveled of the copies.

It is possible that a fourth copy may be extant. Among the interesting Clement C. Moore papers owned by The New-York Historical Society there is a letter of Dr. Moore to A. T. Keeler, March 6, 1856. Dr. Moore sends Mr. Keeler a copy of "A Visit from St. Nicholas." This copy could, of course, be the Shanghai copy or a fourth copy. It seems curious that Dr. Moore should have copied out the poem twice during March, 1856.

Columbia Univ. Dr. Moore's Alma Mater, has considerable manuscript material as Dr. Moore wrote up the minutes of the meetings of the Board of Trustees and many reports. Columbia does not, however have a copy of its alumnus' poem. Nor is there a copy at General Theological Seminary.

Whether you experience the rarefied pleasure of reading Dr. Moore's poem in manuscript or whether you read it in the plainest of typefaces, the wonder and excitement of Christmas are in every line. I am sure this poem will always be an important and well-loved bit of Christmas literature.

the focal point of the Library's Fall Exhibition. Written during 1837-1861, the Journals are the source for the two books which Thoreau published during his lifetime: A Week on the Concord and Merrimack Rivers (1849) and Walden (1854). Many entries in the first book are from the "missing" journal.

Included in the exhibition are many manuscripts, letters, and first editions of Thoreau, Emerson, Hawthorne, and other American writers of the time. There is a letter of recommendation by Emerson, dated May 2, 1838, on behalf of his college classmate, Thoreau, ". . . a graduate of Harvard University, in August 1837. . . ."

Pasted in one of Thoreau's notebooks is a copy of Emerson's "Concord Hymn." Of particular interest is Thoreau's letter of August 29, 1843, to his mother. He had come to New York and although he had not been greeted with open arms by publishers he wrote that ". . . I may yet accomplish something in a literary way."

FIREARMS

The Pavois -- -- Its Description and Use

By HARRY WANDRUS

An element of defense which saw considerable use in middle Europe during the early fifteenth century, but which fell into disfavor with the increased use of the firearm is the pavois. The Germans called it the tratsche which makes one think of the target or targe as used in Scotland and England. Actually it resembles this in name only being a completely differently shaped protection. In English this shield is the pavis, in Polish it is the pawecza and in Bohemian it is the pavese or shield. Most references give this latter pavese as the origin of the name and the assumption might thus be that it is of Bohemian origin though it apparently found usage by many national groups including the Hungarians.

Basic construction of the pavois may vary, but essentially and most commonly these were made of a large slab of wood carved to a concave inside curve behind which a man might crouch. Size of these varied possibly according to the size of the man carrying it or its prime usage, e.g. to use as fortification supplement or for hiding one bowman. Some shields called pavese are indeed rather small and it becomes something somewhat doubtful as to the limits of the word for the description of shield. The archer's shields, for that is what they were primarily, were sometimes made of leather presumably stretched over a framework or a solid wooden core. In the wooden variety the inside surface might be covered with a burlap-like material or cow or other hide. The outside surface served as a wide area on which to paint heraldic, identifying symbols, or as most commonly during this period, religious symbols. This was a period of great religious unrest and open warfare and the emblazoned shields served to show the religious fervor of its owner and his side as well. For the purpose of carrying the shields were equipped with a strap or grip so arranged that a man might crook-up his arm and thus protect the bulk of his torso while walking. It might conceivably find use in riding, but this was largely a walking man's shield—and archers generally did so. Actually we find many instances where a shield carrier did the actual carrying for the archer—when under attack this carrier might serve two purposes, he would hold the shield up as a protection for his archer against enemy arrows, and with sword in hand also protected him from direct bodily contact. The crossbow was much in evidence during this time and the crossbow man used the same shield; because of his more difficult type of loading, he suffered periods of defenselessness. The shield was of special value during the sieges against cities, both during the early advances against the walls, when temporary protection was needed, but later when the attackers had dug in. Probably the best use was found in supplementing the fortifications or forts made of armoured wagons on trains (see HOBBIES, p. 142, November, 1951) where the shields were placed between wagons, were used as doors, etc. whenever the train stopped for the night. During the march the men carrying these shields walked with them held on the outside to add protection to the train itself.

The shields were certainly not light enough or maneuverable enough to be used in pitched battle, the specimen illustrated for example measures 38 x 21 inches and may be 1½ inches of solid wood in some places—certainly not a mere handful nor a thing easily played about. They were adequate protection against light sword and spear thrusts, against the flail, and at moderate range most likely stopped arrows and bolts—but they were certainly of little value against firearms, even those crude items which were just making themselves known then—and like much of the armour which went down with the advent of firearms, so did the pavois.

There were relatively few pavois in collections, possibly because they were carried by men of non-noble birth and thus not so likely saved as was the armour of men of higher rank—but more likely because they were made of perishable material and most wooden specimens have suffered much from wood-borer destruction. The illustrated specimen is one formerly in the William Randolph Hearst collection and was for a long time identified as being Germanic until the author noted the almost invisible three white swans which repose on a red shield or field just above center. These are part of the coat-of-arms of Jan Huss, an early reformation leader of the late 14th and early 15th century and identifies this shield as being of Bohemian origin. When first seen in the Hearst Warehouse in the Bronx, New York, it was so covered with the grime of five centuries that much of the detail was completely lost. Ultra-violet examination revealed that apparently nothing had ever been done to it in the way of restoration. Subsequent cleaning has revealed a great deal more detail than was first evident and though much of this is not immediately apparent in the photograph, a description might make this more noted.

The basic strengthening core of the shield is of hard wood; on the inner surface is a coating of a burlap-like material covered with what might be compared with our modern gesso, e.g., a mixture of whiting and glue. The back was painted a solid color, something like a green or green-black. The front cover received a similar treatment, but because it was meant to be an artist's "canvas," it received a smoother, finer coat. A coating of silver or silver-like material covered the first layer and all subsequent painting was done over this. The designs have religious implications or connotations in such representations as the scale designs (the religious fish stories), the sunbursts, scrolls, clouds, the religious coat-of-arms of the early pre-reformationists, etc. The predominating colors are silver, gold or ochre, the red of the coat-of-arms and

INDIAN RELICS THE SNOW SNAKE GAME

By Julian C. Spurgeon

The Snow Snake Game of the Indians was written of by Morgan in his League of the Iroquois, and his illustration of the snow snake shows a lead point upon a hickory stick. It has little resemblance to a snake.

Like the Iroquois wooden boats, this lead point seems a modern innovation to me. I believe the ancient ceremony or game had a carved or outlined stone snake-head. Else why the name?

I have a few unquestionable carved snake-heads, and others with outlined snake-heads. I think such will be found in other large collections. The snake-heads in my collection I had considered charms or ornaments. They could have been used as such.

Those fastened upon a stick may have been used ceremonially when not in use upon snow or ice. I would judge that they would travel equally as well upon the ice as upon the crusted snow.

The more I study my collection, the more firmly I am convinced that the Indians who used the stone boats also used the Snow Snakes with stone heads upon them. Hematite seems to have been the preferred stone.

Some Snow Snakes have carved eyes and other markings. Others have only the general shaping of a snake-head but may have had painted eyes and mouth. They are so old that, should such have been the case, no traces of the paint now remain. These carved and outlined snake-heads are adaptable to fastening upon a stick, like a spear or arrow.

I have hematite spears and arrows. It is probable that some thick ones I had considered such were actually used in the Snow Snake Game. I also have jasper arrows too thick to be suitable for penetrating points.

It is probable that some thick arrows, especially those of hematite, were used on the Snow Snake Stick. Though seemingly of crude shaping, they may never have been intended for use as arrows.

My daughter's husband, Joseph W. Clark, advises me that the Davenport Museum, Davenport, Iowa, shows a

1. Some hematite spears and arrows. Some of the thick ones may have been fastened upon the Snow Snake Stick. These are now mounted in glass frames.

2. Hematite specimens. Some of the thick ones were probably fastened upon the Snow Snake Stick. These are now mounted in glass frames.

3. Snow Snake-heads, one on Stick which is one inch wide.

4. Same picture of Snow Snake-heads, except the Snow Snake Stick is turned over. At top right of Stick is a snake whistle. The second below the Stick may be a snake-head boat. It is hollowed. At top left of Stick is a pebble with carved eyes and polished, smooth base. All do not necessarily have to be fastened to a stick. Some may be ornaments or pendants. We do not know how heavy a weight may have been required.

Snow Snake Stick which was secured from the Indians in early pioneer days. It does not resemble a snake but appears as a long, straight, round stick. If it had any lead weight upon it, he failed to notice that. As lead was plentiful in that region it might be it had a lead weight.

It is difficult for a photograph to do justice to these stones. Dark red hematite does not show small carvings to advantage. Some have an effigy upon the thin, fastening end of the stone. I have one hematite specimen mounted upon a stick with an effigy head at the thin, fastening end. It might be intended to represent a snake swallowing its prey.

When fastened to a stick, only the oval head is in view. This gives it a more snake-like appearance than when not so mounted. The others, so fastened to sticks, would resemble the one shown on the stick.

All in the photograph are hematite except two which are of flint and two that are carved pebbles. One hematite shown may be a snake-head boat. Another large one shown is a whistle. I have numerous effigies whistles.

Some of my finer specimens are not shown. They are in mounted frames with pendants and ornamental pieces.

This phase of Indian Art requires further research and study before we can be certain what variations were used upon the Snow Snake Stick.

OHIO PIPESTONE

John R. Thompson, in an interesting article in the Portsmouth, Ohio, Times, calls attention to an interesting deposit in that area. For his article he interviewed a local Indian relic collector, Dr. Paul E. Bennett, who said, "Actually, this spot should be known to everybody in the region." Continuing Dr. Bennett said: "Generations ago, Indians journeyed here from perhaps as far away as Mexico to obtain a special stone they used in making pipes.

"But if you were to dig a piece of it from the ground, you might be surprised to find how soft it is and how easy it is to work to any desired shape," the physician said.

"It's surprising that so much of the stone should be on top of Feurt Hill. No other hill I know of nearby has any."

"Among relic collectors, the stone is known as 'Ohio pipestone,'" Dr. Bennett said. "But few of them around the nation know it was obtained near Portsmouth.

"Thousands of Indians must have made trips to the top of the hill to get pipestone," Dr. Bennett said.

"I'd like nothing better than to dig up the entire section. I'm sure that many tools the Indians used in digging could be found around the trenches.

"The stone has varying colors when dug from the ground. Gray and yellow seem to predominate. But to the passing motorist, red is the most prominent. Numerous red outcroppings can be seen.

"Even a mudhole at one side of the road has a red tinge.

"You can see how different it is from the average mudhole," Dr. Bennett said.

"Geologists say steatite contains talc, the material from which talcum powder is made. And talc is the softest of all minerals. In the geologic scale of hardness, talc is rated No. 1. The scale runs up to 9, with diamond having the top number.

"Indians, having no knowledge of the scale, nevertheless found steatite a superior stone from which to carve their pipes.

"Many Indians had no stone for their pipes and fashioned them from clay, which they baked," Dr. Bennett said.

Dr. Bennett predicted that many collectors would make trips here when they learn that the Ohio pipestone deposit actually is located near Portsmouth.

"Collectors all over the nation talk about it, but only few, if any, actually know where it is," he said. "To me, it's astounding that so many people right here in Scioto County know so little about this rock formation."

THE HORSE IN INDIAN CULTURE

The "wild west" of the movies, fiction, and to some extent of fact—of Sitting Bull and Chief Crazy Horse, of war-whooping, scalping, hard-riding, half-naked red savages whose signature music is the fast tattoo of horses' hoofs — was a relatively late development which reached its climax only in the 19th century shortly before the Plains Indians were settled on reservations.

The mobile and aggressive Sioux and Blackfeet, the fighting Comanche, whom our Army officers on the frontier used to call "the finest horsemen in the world," were plodding footmen little more than a century earlier. Then they hunted the big, shaggy bison on foot. When they moved camp their only beasts of burden were dogs — and women. They first recognized the horse as a "big dog" capable of carrying heavier loads farther and faster. But when they became "horse Indians," the use of the new animal came to change every major aspect of Indian life—not only their hunting methods and war tactics, but also their childhood games, their social life, and their religious beliefs.

These ideas are brought out in detail in a scientific report, "The Horse in Blackfoot Indian Culture," by John C. Ewers, Smithsonian Institution, ethnologist and expert on the Plains Indians. Much of the information on which this study was based he obtained from interviews with elderly Blackfeet, Sioux, Flathead, and Kiowa Indians over a period of more than a decade.

Legend ascribes the origin of the Indian horse to strayed animals of the epic Coronado Expedition of 1541. This, Mr. Ewers says, is highly unlikely. For one thing, Coronado had only two mares, and there is no record that either of them escaped. Probably Indians first obtained horses through peaceful trade from Spanish ranches in New Mexico a century later. Gradually horses spread northward from tribe to tribe. By mid-18th century some Indians of the Canadian Plains were skilled horsemen. The life of the nomadic, bison-hunting tribes came to have a pastoral quality. Indians developed methods of breeding, training, care, and protection of horses. They taught their children to ride at an early age by simply tying them in the saddle.

Riding a horse that could move faster than the swiftest bison, the Indian could kill in a few minutes enough to provide his family with meat for weeks. Hunters' time was released for prolonged feasting, complicated ceremonies, and extended raids against enemy tribes.

Before the coming of the horse the Indians literally stood on an equal footing. No one owned much property for it was not possible to transport many weighty articles on dog or woman back. Even the Indian home, the tipi, of the early period was of necessity small so that it could be easily moved. Horses enable the Indian to use and transport larger tipis and more elaborate furnishings. Wealth itself came to be measured in terms of horse ownership. Some individuals owned hundreds of horses. They were wealthy, influential. Others owned few or no horses. They were poor and sometimes dependent on their fellows for even the necessities of life.

Intertribal warfare, which in prehistoric times had been defensive in character — warriors protected their bodies with bulky leather armor and large rawhide shields — became bloodier and casualties greater. No longer could a warrior hide behind his shield in safety. Accent shifted to swift, offensive action. The change was as marked as that from the static, trench warfare of World War I to the rapid movement of General Patton's mechanized forces in World War II.

But by the time these changes became common among the Plains tribes, these Indians found themselves forced to defend their beloved hunting grounds from white migrants and settlers. Out of this situation arose the Indian Wars of the Great Plains, whose heroic action is interpreted in history, fiction, and the cinema.

The Picture POST CARD

Madonnas on Postcards

By LOUISE COLLINS

It is the time of the year when choirs are practicing Christmas oratorios, chimes from church towers are ringing out the glad tidings to noon-day shoppers and to late afternoon crowds of workers going home to their dinners and fires, and people are rushing hither and yon buying presents and holly and mistletoe. The holiday spirit is everywhere, and good will pervades the air.

We can hardly realize that there was a time when these thrills were unknown to the world — when the religious year centered around the Passover, and the Christ Child was still a Prophecy.

Then came the wonderful night when Joseph and Mary had returned to Bethlehem for the taking of the Census, and the time for the fulfillment of the prophecy had come. This was the night when the Angels sang and the shepherds were guided to the manger in a stable, back of a crowded inn. This was the night of the Nativity of our Lord.

After that the world was never the same again. Through thirty more years our Master was preparing himself for the most electrifying and lasting of all ministries. Since then Christianity has circled the earth. Great Empires have ruled in His name. Great churches have been built in His name. Since that time great stories and poems have been composed about Him and His followers; and the great music of the masses, oratorios, cantatas, and hymns have had Him as the central theme. Since then the greatest of artists have sketched, and painted, and sculptured scenes from His life. Many of these are considered the greatest masterpieces of all time.

Pictures by the great Christian artists are the most prized pieces of all the world's store of art. They are sought after by connoisseurs, and most of them have been placed in the great art museums of the Western World. Others are still found in the great and fabulous old Cathedrals for which they were made.

Even copies and prints of the great masterpieces are often very expensive, and are collected by people of means. Yet these same masterpieces have been reproduced on post cards. And art students, art lovers, and post card collectors can amass great numbers of beautiful pictures from many art museums.

Among our post card copies of Madonna and the Christ Child are pictures whose originals are found in the Metropolitan Museum of New York, the Louvre in Paris, the British Museum and National Gallery in London, the Vatican in Rome, and art Galleries of Florence, Milan, Venice, and Dresden, and Antwerp.

Among the artists of the Madonnas represented are Titian, Leonardo DaVinci, Raphael, Andrea del Sarto, Fra Lippi, Bellini, Botticelli, and others equally famous. In the days when oil painting came into popularity for the first time, the artists all had wealthy patrons — either great noblemen or great churchmen. The former had the painters do innumerable portraits of members of the royal families, and the latter commissioned pictures and statues for the cathedrals, monasteries, and the Vatican. Many Italian artists worked for the Pope himself. It thus is natural that Italy became somewhat a leader in the painting and appreciation of Madonna and related pictures.

Among the National Gallery cards printed in continental size is a beautiful reproduction of "The Holy Family" by the great artist Titian. Titian, unlike most of the Italian painters, depicted his characters as humble Judeans rather than as wealthy Italians. The coloring is rich, the picture is lifelike and charming.

Titian was a knight of the Holy Roman Empire, and as an artist he is most famous for the portraits of beautiful women. In 1571 when Titian was 99, he and his son both died in the Plague. Following their deaths, the rabble broke into his house and looted it of many prized paintings. Thus we do not know of what pictures we may have been deprived.

Most of the famous Madonnas were painted by Italian artists of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. Many were by the famous three: Leonardo Da Vinci, Raphael Santi, and Michel Angelo. Da Vinci had imagination, inventiveness, and versatility, but he rarely finished a job, for stability was not one of his talents. He was the father of many of our so called modern inventions, and his brain jumped to new ideas before he had time to execute the old. On post cards we have reproductions of his "Virgin of the Rocks," "Virgin and Child with St. Anne."

Raphael arrived in Florence in 1504, at a time when Leonardo and Michelangelo were popular competitors, and all of Florence was art conscious. Raphael painted a great many Madonnas. It is said that he painted a Madonna for almost every church in Italy. Among those we have are "Madonna, Child and St. John," "The Sistine Madonna," "La Madonna della Seggiola," "Madonna de Baldacchino," and "Madonna del Granduca."

All of Raphael's babies are large and healthy in appearance. It is told that when the "Sistine Madonna" was sold to the King of Saxony, one of the art critics of the time said the child was "too common looking." Raphael's Madonnas are all plump. They were painted from models and seem alive. His pictures were large, painted to be seen for several hundred feet.

Michael Angelo was more interested in sculpture. One of his Madonnas found its way to Flanders. There, this beautiful marble Italian Madonna looks a little incongruous as "Our Lady of Bruges."

Fra Lippi painted many beautiful pictures in the prevailing Italian Style. Among them are "Madonna in Adoration," "Virgin and Child," and "Madonna col Figlio."

Madonna post cards from the collection of Louise Collins

The following Madonnas are worth having. They are beautiful masterpieces that include in their number: Andrea Del Sarto's "Madonna delle Arpie;" Barocci's "La Nascita di

Gesu;" Albertini's "La Madonna col Bambino;" Allegri's "De Heilige Nacht;" Bellini's "Madonna of the Pomegranate;" Dolci's "La Madonna Della Del Dito;" and Fra Giovanni's

"Adoration of the Magi."

Other Madonnas and related pictures include: Bernardo Daddi's "The Annunciation; Della Francesca's "The Nativity;" Luini's "La Vergine;" Botticelli's "La Vierge Au Cusin Vert;" and Fouquet's "Adoration of the Shepherds," and "Adoration of the Magi;" and Fra Angelico's "Flight into Egypt."

Not all the Madonna and Christmas paintings come from Italy and the Romance countries. Holland has had many famous painters interested in painting Madonnas and the Child Jesus. We have among our cards copies of Geertgen's "The Nativity," Van Eyck's "The Virgin and the Donator;" and Rubens's "The Holy Family." The Dutch people painted the Holy family as typical Dutch and dressed them in the fine fabrics then popular in Holland just as the Italians had dressed them in typical Italian Renaissance headdress and clothing.

These and many more famous masterpieces can be found on the cards from art museums and cathedrals. Companies which have made the copies which we have in our collection are: Tuck, Stengel, Rotograph, Nomis of Paris, Waterlow and Sons Ltd. of London, A. Traldi of Milan, Roberto Hoesch of Milan, Balzoni and Zucchi of Milan, Julius Bard of Berlin, Pistone of Florence, and Max Jaffe of Vienna.

Most of these cards were printed in the first decade of the century. However, in the last few years more modern prints are being made again.

These cards are a "MUST" to the collectors of art cards and they are an interesting part of a religious collection - a collection of church views and Bible scenes.

These cards do not come in great quantities as the result of exchange alone. Most people who have religious art cards value them. They save them for their children, give them to their churches and colleges and libraries, and do not exchange them too often. They are sometimes found in collections of old cards, but oftener not. The people who filled old albums with bright greeting cards and clever comics did not often go in for art cards. Art students have collected them, but they wore them out or passed them on to other art students who did wear them out. They can be found in the artists' supply stores and better gift shops in art centers. As you expect, the prices are a little above ordinary.

POST CARD SHORTS, NEWS AND PREVIEWS

1. The Post Card Digest for October, 1956, contains a page of interesting information on a post card mailed in Eisenach, September 6, 1878. The picture is a small woodcut of the Wartburg near Eisenach, and in the old manner is completely covered with writing. A card of this type would more nearly be found in an accumulation of old correspondence than in a collection of colorful cards. This is information, not guesswork — both sides of the card are photographed, and the message deciphered by Charles R. Davis. The card belongs to Miss Rita Solow.

2. The September Elben Card Collector contains a history of that paper from its beginning in 1944 and reprints of a number of articles printed. This is a good addition to your post card library.

3. From a reader in West Point, Georgia: "Here is some information for your column: Rhodes Memorial Hall in Atlanta (Georgia Department of Archives and History) has an album containing a fine collection of old post cards of historical scenes of Georgia. All collectors in this area should drop in and see it. Very few people know it is there. A reader."

5. Continental sized post cards have to be filed separately as another collection. When filed with your regular cards they become frazzled and broken along the edges. We started to swap off ours, but were tempted to look at them first. You know the answer — they were our very most beautiful cards. We got another box and started a second collection. Continental cards would make a good specialty. But they cost 3c each to mail openly and they do not fit an ordinary envelope.

6. There is a new local club slanted toward the post card collectors. It will fill a need in a section of the country not formerly serviced by a post card club. To those interested in the Greensboro General Hobbyists Society, you may write Mrs. Patricia W. Bolding, Director, 412 East Whitington Street, Greensboro, N. C.

7. The New Year is coming up — we would like to hear again from all the clubs that are still extant — our notes should be brought up to date. Some one wrote us this week and asked if a certain club is still in existence. Since that club does not carry an ad, and since we have not heard one word (even in answer to inquiry) in two years, we can give the writer of the letter no information. We will be glad not to lose track of any good club.

NATURAL HISTORY

Shoreline At Point Barrow Recedes Southward

The shoreline at Point Barrow, the northernmost land under the American flag, is receding southward at a rate of about seven feet a year. It is probable that the land extended at least 500 feet farther north 75 years ago, an assumption borne out by the disappearance of a recorded Eskimo village.

The recession, pointed out by Prof. G. E. MacGinitie of California Institute of Technology, in a report just published by the Smithsonian Institution, is due to northeast-sweeping ocean currents and wind tides on a very low-lying land. Prof. MacGinitie was director for over a year at the Navy's Arctic Research Laboratory at Point Barrow.

Were it not for these currents and wind tides the land might be building up slowly northward, according to the topography of the region. Six hundred miles southward are the great Brooks Mountains, reaching elevations of 8,000 feet. Out of them many rivers flow northward — the Kuk, the Utokok, the Kokoluk, the Kukpoivruk, the Ippikpuk — which bring down a considerable quantity of debris. These rivers flow into the Arctic and it might be assumed, would be building up the coastline.

Just below the mountains, however, are 25,000 square miles of slightly rolling tundra plains, dotted with lakes and ponds. Through this region the rivers, all but the largest of which freeze solidly in winter, flow very slowly and leave much of the mountain debris behind. Below and beyond these plains lies the great tundra region with very little slope to the shore of the Arctic Ocean. All of this region is frozen to a depth of approximately 1,000 feet. Owing to this topography, not enough sediment is carried to the Arctic shore to compensate for that carried away by the prevailing sea currents and wind tides.

Several other physical phenomena were observed by Prof. MacGinitie, for example:

The Arctic Ocean is slightly less salty than other seas because of the many rivers draining more than 4,500,000 square miles which empty into it and the low rate of evaporation throughout the year. The fresh water entering the Arctic Ocean is not as great as other regions of the earth, owing partly to the fact that the whole drainage area is a desert with only about four inches of precipitation, including snow, per year. Owing to dilution by rivers and melting ice, there are considerable changes in saltiness from place to place and at various levels, but for the most part the sea animals have become well adjusted. The transparent sea worm, Sagitta, succumbed, however, when the salinity dropped to about six parts per thousand and several other sea worms ordinarily found at considerable depths died in the brief time required to haul a dredge through a few feet of surface water of very low salinity where ice was melting.

Light and life are closely interwoven, here as elsewhere. Many of the animals collected and studied by Prof. MacGinitie live ordinarily on the bottom at depths below 100 feet, a realm of darkness, but some are dependent for food on the microscopic plant forms of the sea surface. Light near Point Barrow is by no means so intense as in more southern regions, he points out, but it is present continuously over longer periods and appears quite sufficient for the plankton. The basic process of photosynthesis is carried on best by these plants in subdued light. Even at the North Pole, where the sun is below the horizon for nearly six months, periods of twilight help to shorten the time of total darkness to the extent that diatom growth can go on for two or three of the winter months.

Ice itself, Professor MacGinitie found, has much less effect on light than might be supposed. "Within a tent in January even when the ice is five feet thick," he says, "a greenish glow comes through it from below. The snow cover itself reflects light but at the same time glows with transmitted light and much light enters through it into the ice and water below."

Much of Prof. MacGinitie's biological work was carried out in fog of such density that visibility was limited to a quarter of a mile or less and the danger of becoming lost in a boat might be considered quite great. In this connection he records a curious phenomenon. Almost always, he says, "There was a bright spot in the fog on the side opposite the sun. By knowing the time of day the proper direction of the boat could be determined by this lighter area—a great help in navigation."

LOGICAL CONCLUSION REGARDING OUR

"GREAT PLAINS"

Why the "great plains" — the vast extent of grassland, almost treeless, extending from western Indiana to the eastern slopes of the Rocky Mountains?

They probably have existed in something like their present form since long before there were any human inhabitants, says Dr. Waldo R. Wedel, Smithsonian Institution archeologist, and are due primarily to long-continuing climatic conditions.

For some years, Dr. Wedel points out, it has been contended that the American prairies were manmade, due to the "fire hunting" of the Indian tribes. Among many tribes, fire drives were used in the pursuit of bison and other large-game animals. For whatever purpose they were set, such fires ran unchecked until they reached a stream or other balk. Repeated burning destroyed existing trees it has been argued, and prevented their replacement by new growth.

But, says Dr. Wedel, studies of habitation sites through the Plains area made largely in connection with the River Basin Surveys being conducted under Smithsonian auspices, show that there were great dust movements over the plains before there was any agriculture. The dust, he suggests, must have been picked up from dry uplands from which the grass had been killed by drought.

Geological surveys also, he points out, show that there were typical grassland soils in the area throughout the ice ages. They were typical of each recession of the glaciers. They now are buried deep under the present land surface.

At present, he says, natural tree growth is practically restricted to river-bottom lands and ravines, and there is very little tendency for the woodlands to spread out over the plains.

Thus, Dr. Wedel contends, the Indian farmers can be neither blamed nor credited with the creation of the prairies. They took the land as they found it — as did the white farmers who came after them. Each suffered alike from the periodic droughts that afflict the area.

FISHERMEN! YOU CAN'T TOP THIS!

A specimen of what may be the world's largest species of sea bass has recently been added to the collections of the Smithsonian Institution. It is a 337½ pound fish 78½ inches long, the third of its kind caught near the Eniwetok Atoll in the South Pacific, scene of several atomic-bomb tests.

The great sea bass is challenged for size only by some sharks and some members of the tuna family. The largest of the Eniwetok specimens weighed 414 pounds and was more than 81 inches long.

This particular fish — Promicrops lanceolatus — has been well known for many years to northern Australians and is highly prized for food, but this is the first record for the Marshall Islands. It ranges from the South Pacific islands to Hawaii and the Red Sea and is closely related to the giant sea bass of the Atlantic and eastern Pacific known as the jewfish. Smaller specimens sometimes are found in Pacific-coast fish markets.

The fish is also related to the fresh-water large-mouthed bass of the eastern United States but belongs to the different zoological family. The zoological classification has been somewhat confused in the past, says Dr. Leonard P. Schultz, Smithsonian curator of fishes, by the great difference in appearance of young and adult forms. As the fish ages its eyes get smaller and the space between them wider.

It is a deep-water fish and apparently an omnivorous eater. When the Smithsonian specimen was opened it was found to have two spiny lobsters in its stomach, together with what were apparently the remains of a chuck roast dumped in the sea from some American mess.

FENCING BIRDS

Birds that hold fencing tournaments are the big-billed toucans of Barro Colorado Island, the Smithsonian Institution's tropical preserve in Gatun Lake, Panama Canal Zone.

They fence with their formidable beaks but seem careful not to hurt one another. One scientist who studied Barro Colorado's bird life described the birds as follows:

"I saw fourteen toucans scattered about in a big leafless tree in the center of the jungle. Two appeared to be fencing. They stood in one spot and fenced with their bills for a half minute or so, rested, and were at it again. Presently they flew off into the forest and then I noticed two others that had now begun to fence. Then one of these flew away, and the remaining one picked a new opponent and fell to fencing again. They did not move about much while fencing, although sometimes one climbed above the other as though to gain an advantage. They fenced against each other's beaks and never seemed to strike at the body. There was a

Old newspapers, faded and stained and filled with accounts of this country's history as it happened, are on display in the main Public Library building in observance of American Newspaper week.

Several showcases are filled with original issues and reproductions of papers dating from 1704. They include Eastern and Southern newspapers and many early Missouri and Kansas City papers.

They recount political campaigns, the Civil war and chattv. local news.

Echo of Big Fire

The drama of the Chicago fire is told in an extra published October 9, 1871, by the Chicago Evening Journal. The account opens:

"Chicago is burning! Up to the hour of writing (1 o'clock p.m.) the best part of the city is already in ashes. An area of between six and seven miles in length and nearly a mile in width, embracing the great business part of the city, has been burned over and now lies a mass of smoldering ruins."

An issue of Horace Greeley's Log Cabin, dated September 12, 1840, reveals its support of William Henry Harrison in the 1840 presidential election. The paper was named the Log Cabin because that was Harrison's symbol in opposition to the wealthy Van Buren.

The Chattanooga Tennessee Rebel was passionately devoted to the cause of the Confederacy. When forced out of Chattanooga it attached itself to the army of Tennessee and followed General Bragg into Georgia.

An Unusual Paper

Other evidences of the war are seen in a reproduction of the Vicksburg, Miss., newspaper of July 2, 1863. It rapid give and take . . . the bills clattering loudly against each other."

These fencing toucans are among the more conspicuous birds of the island, particularly because of their call — a shrill, froglike "cree," which is repeated over and over again and can be heard half a mile away. The call is most frequent in the morning and late in the afternoon, but it stops abruptly at sunset.

was printed on wallpaper because the source of newsprint was cut off from the besieged city.

Many newspapers were published in Kansas City in the second half of the 19th century. Early issues of six are exhibited.

They are the Western Metropolitan, the Daily Penny Reporter, the Kansas City Presse (a German language newspaper published from 1884 to 1929), the Kansas City Enterprise (the ancestor of the Kansas City Journal), the Kansas City Daily Journal of Commerce and the Kansas City Daily Journal.

The third issue of the first newspaper in Missouri is on display. It is the Missouri Gazette, published in St Louis July 26, 1808. Early newspapers from St. Joseph, Liberty, Weston, Carrollton and Columbia are in the collection.

The exhibit is in the art department at the main building, Ninth and Locust streets.

GEMS & MINERALS

We Took a Field Trip

By H. DOUGLAS BROWN

As one of the adjuncts of the mineral classes held by the Washington State Chamber of Mines, there were week-end field trips conducted by the writer. It is pleasant to meet today, ten years after, with members of those classes and be told of their remembrance and enjoyment of the trips.

One trip recently mentioned was to the area one hundred miles north of Seattle on Puget Sound. The precise locality is about the town of La Conner. It in itself is ample recompence for the trip. One of the really old towns on the upper Sound, it has always been a fishing village, with trade much devoted to the Swinomish Indians. Just across the arm of the Sound, there is a fine Indian village with totem poles, war canoes, and their homes. Periodically, they have their celebrations and their smoked salmon are the real thing. Crossing a bridge over this arm of the Sound, one continues straight over the hill for perhaps two miles. Then a right turn takes one once again to the Sound. Here is located the fish traps of the Indians and usually one can see the big salmon swimming about in them.

Skirting the shore easterly one finds much mineral of a mixed calcium-silica composition which is interestingly fluorescent under the medium and long-wave ultra-violet lamps. Then descending to the beach, there are seams of brilliant orpiment and realgar, both arsenic minerals. By careful work, one can get out fine realgar crystals. If that is one's purpose; a can of spray plastic is useful so that the specimen can be sprayed and then in a few minutes it has hardened and the chances of its being obtained without breakage are much improved.

Continuing still further, there is an old and now abandoned strontium mine. Here fine blue celestite and cream colored strontianite, are to be had. The writer has been fortunate to obtain pseudomorphs of fluorite from this mine and some strontianite that is quite fluorescent.

The adjoining formation is very largely serpentine and dunite. The former is frequently intruded with cinnabar and when cut shows up odd but quite attractive polished specimens. One should not be content with the first find, but survey the whole beach to see where your best material is, then go to work and get out some good solid pieces. If you would extend the trip, return to the mainland, taking the northerly roads one soon is in a hilly country. Here in the farm belt, is a small lake snuggled down with old farms about it. On the west side, there is interesting massive jasper in several colors. A fence at one of the farm houses is made of it. Taking an old southerly trail, one comes on pits of basanite. It has interesting inclusions of marcasite takes a high polish and makes very fine sets. On one occasion I found a seam higher up on the hill that showed native copper. As I never fully prospected this hill, I believe it has the potential of yielding other interesting minerals and polishing types. Certainly, the area offers much for a field trip for any Rockhound group.

THE LUCK of the OPAL

The early Orientals believed in the medicinal values of many gems, and large quantities of seed pearls were dissolved in strong vinegar for curative purposes. To wear a ruby was to be protected from poisons. And the opal was intrusted with the preservation of eyesight — probably because of a certain variety of opal which, due to the arrangement of its crevices, looks like a cat's eye and is commonly known by that name.

But lucky or unlucky, and regardless of changing moods, the opal remains a remarkable gem — magnificent and mysterious as the flaming splendor of the sunset it emulates.

PRECIOUS METAL MINIATURES

From Miniatura

For centuries royal and titled families have counted their wealth in pieces of gold and silver plate, made more valuable than the raw bullion for having been fashioned into useful or decorative shapes by gold and silversmiths of the day. But times of stress have brought about the destruction of much historic plate; without a pang, precious objects have been consigned to the crucible. In England, from the time of the Norman conquest to the death of George III, the destruction of gold and silver plate, both sacred and secular has been vast. In the Wars of the Roses, the plate of the barons was transformed into metal; during the Civil War, the ruin of the royal collection of gold and silver plate, regarded as the most precious in Europe in the Tudor times, was complete.

In Italy, as early as 1314, the city of Florence had statutes for the regulation of goldsmiths; working in metal was a well established art, yet throughout history no other country has suffered more severe losses in secular plate.

Today, nothing remains of the great collection of the Court of Ferdinand and Isabella, the most brilliant epoch in the history of Spain. All the great treasure of the Escorial and princely houses was converted into coin during the Civil Wars of 1830 and 1840 and at later times, and when King Alfonso XIII left the throne in 1931, the royal collection contained no Spanish secular plate of the sixteenth century. What was left of the Spanish treasures was housed in the great cathedrals and churches before the last Spanish Civil War; what became of this gold and silver plate is not known.

Few specimens of the skill of early Irish craftsmen have survived the centuries; the Ardagh chalice, the Tara brooch and a small number of decorative objects of the eighth century remain as evidence of the masterpieces created by goldsmiths in Ireland; a mere glimpse of the skill of the Anglo-Norman metal worker is afforded by the famous Gloucester candlesticks of 1107-1113 exhibited in the Victoria and Albert Museum; this masterpiece escaped destruction because it is not made of pure silver.

France's great plate treasures, like those of England, also perished. The treasure of Charles V alone contained about twenty-five large gold cups and thirty-six smaller gold hanaps, many of which were enamelled and enriched with pearls and gems. In addition there were goblets, salts, ewers, basins and five great nefes, all of solid gold. Even such common household articles as washing basins were of this precious metal, richly enamelled. But written accounts alone attest to their existence for Louis XIV completed the destruction of the royal plate of France by converting it into coin for the prosecution of his wars.

No trace remains of the precious plate belonging to the House of Braganza except the record that as early as 1382 most of the shops along Gold Street in Lisbon were those of prominent goldsmiths who fashioned princely treasures. Today only the name of the street is unchanged. Dusty archives state that the earliest known recorded regulations for the craft in Portugal date from 1460. These craftsmen prospered so well that by the middle of the sixteenth century Lisbon could boast of 430 gold and silversmiths, most of them located in shops on Gold Street. But in 1725, the extravagant King John V of Portugal ordered most of the precious royal plate to be melted. Not only vessels of Portuguese workmanship but several pieces of English silver, presumably bridal gifts and plate ordered by John V himself suffered that fate. Again in 1755, more plate perished, this time in the Lisbon earthquake.

In the absence of the plate itself, a knowledge of the style and size of secular plate used in European countries during early centuries has been gained from paintings of still life, banquets and building interiors and, in some rare instances, from miniatures.

It is probable that European smiths seeking to vary their work, produced occasional miniatures for their clients' children or even as a bauble for their patrons. If such was the practice, however, no written record has been left, only the objects remain. In England alone are there evidences of toy-makers in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries whose creations, escaping the fate of the larger plates, are collectors' gems today. In the seventeenth century silver toys were in general use among the children of the wealthy. Furniture of the salon, toilet, nursery and kitchen; conveyances such as carriages, chariots, cabriolets, sledges, trucks and countless other articles were reproduced in small scale. Their use was not limited to the toy field for they also served as trinkets and cabinet specimens. Cavaliers, valets, chamber women tending their mistresses, milk-sellers, street criers, porters with merchandise, falcons, falconers, hounds, lap dogs, parrots, monkeys, horses, cats, dogs and pigs were all fashioned on a diminutive scale by silversmiths whose principal occupation was the production of regular size plate and decorative objects.

Some years ago, an English solicitor pondered the advisability of opening an unclaimed box that had been gathering dust in his firm's

PLAYING CARDS

By FREIDA CLARK

Thackeray Transformations

William Makepeace Thackeray was in the midst of designing an issue of Transformation playing cards at the time of his death in 1863. Some of the cards would undoubtedly have been revised, but some were quite clever as he designed them. He had finished only 21, but his daughter, Anne Isabella Thackeray (Lady Ritchie) had them published, with other sketches, in 1876 in a book titled "The Orphans of Pimlico."

Neither cards nor book are very well known, although this writer has had letters of inquiry regarding the cards. They are worthy of the attention of playing card collectors even though the set was never finished. Miss Thackeray writes, "The playing cards were originally intended to form a complete pack, but only a certain number was ever finished. They amused my father very much at the time he drew them."

The cards are described in the order in which they were published in the book, and the more interesting ones are illustrated. Some of the cards have too much detail for good reproduction in the reduced size.

The first card, a Ten of Clubs, entitled "Battle Scene", was made in bas relief in an Assyrian design. Miss Thackeray writes, "For further information see Herodotus." Each Club is the face of a warrior.

The two and the five of Spades do not seem to deserve comment other than American notes and reminiscences. "Lubly Lucy Neal," a southern belle with an admirer on either side as if singing to her, makes the Spade five. The two of Spades, "Dandy Jim from Souf Caroline," speaks for itself.

The three of Spades may be quickly recognized as having a strong appeal to Thackeray, and as one looks at the card it is easy to imagine him chuckling over it. The three figures are labeled, "Mr. Gibbon, Mr. Boswell and Mr. Johnson." Miss Thackeray writes, "He was especially pleased with the likeness of Mr. Gibbon in the three of Spades... Trump card of the whole hand as it is dealt out here."

The next four cards are Clubs which Miss Thackeray refers to as, "Clubs and Croziers." The three of Clubs represents, "The Duke of Marlborough at the Battle of Malplaquet." This card shows the rear view of the Duke on his steed.

The eight of Clubs was inspired by Shakespeare in Henry IV, Part II, Act IV, Scene IV, when Prince Henry said, "I never thought to hear you speak again."

King Henry replied: "Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought."

The six of Clubs seems to have been inspired by one of Thackeray's own poems:

"The Apes of Brazil
When afflicted with ills Retire to the hills."

the departing Witches, the cauldron, the bellows, and Macbeth's little dog. In the midst of this scene is the thistle of Scotland growing in the heath, with a bloom almost full blown.

A two of Diamonds (not illustrated here) needs little comment, since Captain Brown is expressing his delight to Mrs. Smith at Miss Smith's admirable performance of "In My Cottage Near a Wood." Miss Smith is playing what appears to be a piano. One of the Diamonds is Mrs. Smith's face, the other is the back of Miss Smith's neck and shoulders.

The four of Spades seems to be a jumble of thoughts, although part of it is certainly inspired by Byron's poem, "Marino Faliero." The first Spade is the face of "The Black Prince" as he appeared the night after the Battle of Cressy." The upper right Spade is the head of "Lubly Lucy Neal." The lower half of the card is a "view of the Grand Canal, Venice, and Lord Byron in his Gondola." He seems much interested in the lovers or the guitar player in the gondolas near his. The ends of the gondolas are, of course, the two lower Spades.

The five of Clubs is a three-scene card. That is, the left upper Club is the face of the King, who is counting his money. The upper right is the face of the Queen who is in the parlor "eating bread and honey." The lower half of the picture shows the two laundry maids, who are also the two lower Clubs, while the fifth and center Club is the blackbird flying away with the laundry maid's nose.

Some of the red cards appear next, one of which Miss Thackeray thinks a tragic note, "Dr. Birche's Establishment," for the seven of Hearts. She writes, "Here is a tragic episode from Dr. Birche's well-known establishment. Sitting above is the intellectual first form absorbed in its studies; down below are the boys who go up next. John, the footman, seems accustomed to his duties and the Doctor is distinguishing himself with all the generous energy which belongs to the high calling he pursues and to the spirited system by which youth is led to love literature and respect those who are set in authority."

The four of Hearts was inspired by Hamlet, Act I, Scene II.

"Pale or red?"

"Nay very pale."

"And fixed his eyes on you,"

"Most constantly."

The title of the card is "Pale or red?"

The six of Diamonds is alive with action as we see two little Polish men almost dance through the card in the "Mazourka." Miss Thackeray writes, "The music still plays as my father heard it."

The five of Hearts is titled, "Red Indians on the War Path." Miss Thackeray writes, "These Indians are doubtless of a tribe belonging to the Prairies of my father's favorite Leather Stocking."

The two of Clubs (this is the second one, and is not illustrated here) is the, "Battle of Oltentza," and Omar Pacha and his staff are to be seen taking observations from the neighboring heights. The two of Hearts was inspired by an old ballad, "The Bonny House of Airlie." The top Heart is the face of "The Lady looked over the castle Wa', and oh, she sighed sairly when she saw Argyll and a' his men, come to plunder the Bonny House o' Airlie." The seat of Argyll's trousers forms the second Heart, inverted.

The three of Hearts shows the Master flailing Uncle Tom with what seems to be a modified version of the cat-o'-nine-tails, and little Eva has turned from them in tears. The face of each person is a Heart. It seems Thackeray was familiar with Uncle Tom's Cabin.

The two of Diamonds (a second one of this value) needs no description other than the title "Pirouette." The dancer twirls on the clown's shoulder.

For the eight of Diamonds the title tells the story, "Grand Battle Scene—Napoleon in the midst of the Old Guard." Miss Thackeray writes, "My father once said that one of the achievements in life which had given him the most unalloyed satisfaction was the introduction of Napoleon's waistcoat, as it appears in this battle scene, surrounded by the weather-beaten faces of the Old Guard."

As in all decks of Transformation Cards some are clever while some seem pointless, but the artist naturally did the ones first—that to him had some meaning or purpose. We wonder what the remainder of the deck would have been had Thackeray finished them! Anyway, these are the cards as designed and drawn by William Makepeace Thackeray, and given to the world by his daughter.

Thackeray was born in 1811, in Calcutta, India, where his father was in the services of the East India Company. He attended Cambridge, settled in Paris to study art in 1834, and married in 1836. He did his best work after 1840, when it began to appear in Fraser's Magazine. His first real popularity came from his satirical work published in Punch. He rose to major rank among English novelists with the serial publication of his novel, Vanity Fair, in 1847-48. From then until his death in 1863, he was a very busy writer, and left many books, lectures, sketches and comic tales.

It is truly a wondrous thing to behold and to handle something as old as this, something perhaps 550 years old and still sufficiently intact to be able to tell its story. Restoration of a complete sort would be almost sacrilegious, but some idea of what can be revealed by careful cleaning is evident in the before and after of Figure 3 which shows the shield half dirty as received, and half cleaned. Much remains to be done to an item of this sort, loose flakes have already been re-affixed, breaks and cavities filled, some retouching done to complete more of the continuity of lines and a final protective coating applied to make this both an historical art treasure as well as an ancient painting worthy of decorating a collector's home.

At the matches up at Camp Perry, Ohio, during the recent matches held by the National Rifle Association, a number of new teams showed up, particularly those from Ohio, Cincinnati and Toledo. office for over a hundred years. In it he discovered what is probably one of the finest collections of early English silver toys extant. Among the pieces were examples of George Middleton's work, the silversmith whose handicraft is most highly prized for its skill and imagination. Three pieces by Isaac Mayln and examples of John Clifton's skill were easily identified because of their hallmarks. The largest group in the collection were a series by Augustin Courtauld, a prolific toymaker. There were candlesticks, a bed warmer, wool-winder, cups and saucers, plates and spoons, a watering can and other objects. Courtauld's miniatures bear a close relationship to Dutch toys of the period that cannot be compared with George Middleton.

NOTES ON THE OLD TOY MAKERS OF THE TYROL

By RAYMOND J. WALKER

The Austrian province of Tyrol is a mountainous region bordering on Italy and Switzerland. It is part of the Alps. That area prior to World War II was 4,882 square miles with a population of less than 350,000.

At best the mountains yielded a poor living until the middle of the last century when they like Switzerland, became tourist resorts. The isolated valleys are now open. The principle towns are along the route to Brenner Pass, gateway to Italy, and along the Arlberg route from East to West.

Much of this article is based on one by Marguerite Howitt, entitled, "A Tribe of Toy Makers," published in the magazine, "Leisure Hour," for 1876. Miss Howitt tells of her visit to St. Ulrich or Ortiselt, as the natives called their chief village in the Grodenthal, a valley surrounded by odd shaped mountains called dolomites, and watered by the Dirschingar Bach. Grodenthal, long isolated, was opened by the building of a carriage road in 1856 along the river gorge.

The language of the Grodenthal was Romansch, a mixture of German and Italian. But each valley had its own dialect, based on the Latin used by the poor in Roman times. It was further twisted by a hundred generations from mouth to mouth, without a written literature. Whoever the original inhabitants were, they left relics similar to the Etruscans, as was discovered in 1848 when an ancient village site was unearthed near St. Ulrich.

At the time of Miss Howitt's visit the inhabitants of the Grodenthal were still making toys. However, the great days of toy making were over. Like the Swiss, who spend their winters wood carving and making cuckoo-clocks and watch parts, the Tyrolese, especially of this valley, early found wood carving a profitable pastime.

Many specialized in a certain type of toy. There were special carvers of dolls, others for horses, and still others for lambs, etc. Another group specialized in painting the rough carvings. The exporting in 1875 was done by promoters.

Most of the dolls were sent to England. Some of the better wooden heads were sent to Holland. There they were fitted to bodies and dressed in fancy clothes, then shipped to England for the better priced trade. Horses were a popular toy in Belgium. Tastes for other animals were found elsewhere.

One wood carver used water-power to run his plant. He produced a thousand rocking-horses a year. Ash and pear wood were used for most of the wooden toys. Some of the natives still devoted themselves to an even older home industry, that of carving saints for shrines, also Christmas groups of shepherds, Magi, etc.

These people were carving wood as early as 1682 for there is a St. Anthony in the Church of St. Ulrich carved in that year by Dominic Knutzer, a native.

Johann Demetz began to carve picture frames in 1703 from "pinus combra" or Siberian pine which grew in the neighborhood. These frames were elaborated with leaves and shells. Finally came the carving of crucifixes, figures of saints, and children's toys.

In the early days the carvers made many items and hawked their own wares beyond the valley. They returned to make more when their supply was exhausted. Or one member of a family was sent beyond the mountains to peddle the family output. Some of these pedlers became well-to-do. When they made enough money to retire they settled down in their native village, building such types of houses as they had seen in Italy or even far away Spain.

Some of the toy merchants got to America and started toy shops in Philadelphia and New York. Others settled at Oberammergau, now noted for its Passion plays. Still others went to Berchtesgaden, noted in our time as Hitler's hideaway. Both these villages in Bavaria were long the best known toy centers in Germany.

Other toy makers taught their art in Saxony and Bohemia, now part of Czechoslovakia. Until World War II there were large toy manufacturers in those areas who had begun in shops established to sell the output of wood-carvers of the Grodenthal.

Toys made by apprentices in these outposts were sometimes sent home for painting. Most of the Grodenhalers who remained abroad went or sent home for apprentices and sometimes for wives from their native valley.

Descendants of these old toymakers set up shop in Ancona, Florence, Palermo, and other large cities of Italy. Some settled in Paris and Lyons in France; at Barcelona, Madrid, and Valencia, in Spain; in Lisbon, Portugal; Amsterdam, Holland; and in Brussels, Belgium. For some reason they seem never to have settled permanently in England.

In the churchyard of St. Anne rest the bones of many toy carvers, including those of Dominic Mahlknecht. He was born in 1724, and lived like a miser. But he amassed a fortune of 171,000 gulden which he gave away for charitable and religious purposes in Linz, Innsbruck, and Vienna as well as in St. Ulrich.

At one time the women of the valley made great quantities of lace which was exported. Then machine-made lace came. Handmade lace could not compete in price with the machine-made product, and this art died out.

Miss Howitt, on her visit to St. Ulrich eighty years ago saw the ending of an era. Like most tourists of her day she visited the valley in summer when people were busy on their farms. The toy makers she found at work were the infirm and old who kept at the trade all year round.

The farm workers upped toy production during the winter months when the snow lay many feet deep in their valley. It was estimated the average family had an annual income of about $400 American dollars, quite a tidy sum in those days.

On Saturday each week the carvers took their product to the exporters at St. Ulrich. These distributed the carved toys to the artists who painted them. Or if the toys were finished products they were packed and shipped by wagon over the mountains to agents in the larger cities.

Eight or ten exporters had control of the valley business, so the days of golden opportunity for toy makers to go a-wandering with a pack and return with a fortune, had gone. It seemed easier to carve or paint for the exporters than to carve and paint and sell one's own product.

The Austrian government established a school at St. Ulrich to teach drawing, modelling and carving. The students also learned to make jewel cases, albums, picture frames, bread platters, etc., as well as toys and church furniture.

Miss Howitt said, "We have talked much of the toymakers. Let us visit the two principal toy warehouses, those of Herr Purger and Herr Insam. In each, as everywhere else in Grodenthal, we feel very infantile, and have a proper sense of how important the little ones are in this world."

"See room after room piled up with bins full of quadrupeds and bipeds, chiefly in white wood. Parents have become aware of the strange fascination which painted toys have to baby lips. See these flocks of sheep, these manifold chanticleers flung to one side as inferior work of some clumsy laborious carver; these phalanxes of horses, red, white, brown and black. There are the thousand little red platforms on wheels which they are intended to mount."

"And again, here are more horses, everywhere horses. Some supplies are more accurately more carefully finished. Some are done in a cheap cobbling manner. But all are future objects of delight to many little children."

"Here are billions of wooden dolls, flung down helter-skelter, paid for by Herr Insam at five farthings the dozen. Hereafter they will be kissed, hugged, put to bed, and rejoiced over by thousands of little English mothers. For it is in Great Britain, it

Tomlinson-Coat-of-Arms

By HAZEL KRAFT EILERS

The genealogy, Henry Tomlinson And His Descendants, by Rev. Samuel Orcutt (1891) contains a colored reproduction of the Arms pictured here, as a frontispiece, of the book. It is said that Henry Tomlinson, the progenitor of this line, brought with him a painting of the Tomlinson Arms when he arrived in New England in 1652.

Gideon Tomlinson (1780-1854), the 8th Governor of Connecticut and sixth in descent from Henry¹, had a copy of the original painting in his possession. Jabez Huntington Tomlinson, the father of Gideon⁶, was left an orphan at an early age and was reared by his grandfather Zachariah. Jabez was deeply interested in the family genealogy . . . perhaps being an orphan, it gave him a keener sense of "belonging."

This same feeling is engendered on a broader patriotic scale in all of us as we learn of our ancestors and the part they had in developing and defending their country and their convictions. Such knowledge, if instilled in our children, would make history more alive and exciting for them.

Apparently this theory was applied in Scotland, as Walt Disney in a prelude to his Rob Roy movie tells of Scottish children being taught to memorize the family tree before they were old enough to learn their letters. In this way they had instilled in them not only family pride but also an everlasting loyalty.

Records from the Parish Register of St. Werburgh, in Derby, Derbyshire, England, show that Henry¹ Tomlinson, son of George and Maria (Hyde) Tomlinson, was baptized at St. Peter's Church in November 1606. In this same church Henry's parents were married in January, 1600.

Henry, his wife Alice, and probably two or three children, came from Derby to America in 1652 and settled in Milford, Conn. He was a valuable addition to the town of Milford in his capacity of weaver, as artisans of all kinds were needed to help settle and establish the growing communities.

In 1656 Henry and his family moved to Stratford where he purchased large tracts of land from the Indians at Paugasuck and Weantinock. The town records of Stratford state that at a meeting held January 2, 1670, "Henry Tomlinson is chosen and desired to bee an ordinary-keeper, ye which he accepts." He held this responsible office for several years, and died in Stratford, March 16, 1681, leaving his widow Alice, five daughters and two sons.

"In 1688 Alice married, as her second husband, John Birdsey. She died January 25, 1698, in her 90th year." This last statement was taken from L. D. Fessenden's Chronicle of a Branch of the Dayton and Tomlinson Families (1902). If true, the second marriage of Alice occurred when she was eighty years of age—or older! A hardy pioneer.

The daughters of Thomas and Alice Tomlinson married as follows: Margaret to Jabez Harger/Hardier; Mary to Stephen Pierson; Tabitha, as his second wife, to Edward Wooster; Phebe to Lieut. Thomas Wooster; and Bathsheba, who married first Ephraim Stiles, and second Benjamin Curtis.

Jonas², son of Henry and Alice Tomlinson, married Hannah Crow and settled on the land that his father had given him at Derby, Conn. He died in 1692 and at the time of his death he owned large tracts of land in Derby, Stratford and Huntington. His sons, Abraham, John, Captain Isaac and Samuel were active in public life. All were prominent men in public office.

Lieut. Agur Tomlinson, the youngest son of Henry¹, married three times. His first wife was Elizabeth Judson; his second wife was Sarah (Welles) Hawley, granddaughter of Gov. Thomas Welles; and his third wife was Abigail Brown. Agur was a physician and in checking biographical material pertaining to the Tomlinson name I found a noticeable number of Tomlinsons following this same profession.

Americans of Gentle Birth states: "Agar married Sarah Hawley, granddaughter of Gov. Thomas Welles, and to their son Zacharia Tomlinson, the only male representative of the family, he bequeathed the family Coat-of-Arms which he brought with him from England. Zacharia married Hannah Beach and one of their sons, Gideon, became Governor of Connecticut." This is in error on three counts.

First, Agur/Agar was born in Stratford, Conn., November 1, 1658, and it was his father who brought the painting over from England. Second, although Zachariah was the only grandson of Henry¹ residing in Stratford, Zachariah did have male cousins (sons of his uncle Jonas) living in Derby, Conn.

Presumably, as Agur remained in Stratford where he died March 5, 1727-8, he inherited the family heirlooms left behind by his brother who removed to Derby with his family, and this would account for the painting coming into the possession of Zachariah. Third, Gideon Tomlinson (1780-1854), Governor of Connecticut, was a great-grandson of Zachariah, who was born October 31, 1693 in Stratford, died March 15, 1768, and was buried in the Congregational Burying Ground at Stratford.

There are many Tomlinson progenitors, and not all of the name would trace back to Henry and Alice. Clement's First Settlers in Newton Township, New Jersey (1877), deals with descendants of a Joseph Tomlinson who came to New Jersey from the City of London, a member of the Horsbydown Meeting of Friends. He died in 1719 leaving a wife, Elizabeth, and numerous progeny.

The Filson Club Quarterly, No. 12, has a fascinating story of Bryant's Station and the struggle between the Indians and the pioneer settlers of Kentucky. A William Tomlinson from Virginia joined the four Bryant brothers in a hunt for land and helped build the fort when the trip ended. Nicholas Tomlinson was also a key figure at Bryant's Station. He had many exciting encounters with the Indians while serving as an Indian fighter and scout. He was wounded twice in the service of the Station, but in 1790 "was literally shot to pieces by an ambuscade of more than 1,000 Indians."

Each family search leads to interesting bits of knowledge that otherwise would never be brought to mind. In the description of Bryant's Station it was said that the buildings comprising the fort, unlike others in the territory, had the roofs slanting towards the center of the enclosure. Thus, when a fire was started on the roof by the Indians' burning arrows, the women would boost the small boys up to pick off the fire-brands. If built otherwise, it would have been an easy matter for the Indians to pick off the small boys.

In North Carolina a John Tomlinson left a will dated "14th, 10th month, 1697," naming his wife Elizabeth, son John, daughter Elizabeth, son William, daughter Mary and two daughters Reading. (N. C. Historical Register, Vol. 1, p. 78).

References are numerous to the Tomlinson name. To add to the list is the knowledge that the name, in early records, was sometimes written without the final syllable—Tomlyns, Thomling and Tomlins. No doubt some of the descendants kept to these different spellings and if traced back would connect with the Tomlinson family.

INTERPRETATION

Arms: Sable, a fesse between three falcons, volant, or. Crest—Out of a ducal coronet a griffin's head or. Motto—Non sibi, sed patriae.

Translated into non-heraldic terms: A black (sable) shield charged with a gold (or) horizontal band across the center of the shield (fesse) between three flying (volant) gold (or) falcons. Crest—Out of a ducal coronet a griffin's head of gold (or).

The fesse is one of nine so-called Honourable Ordinaries, straight-lined figures usually occupying one-third the surface of the shield. The fesse is the military girdle of honour.

The falcon is a large species of sporting hawk, (a kind of raven) but very little distinction is made between the different species. In heraldry, the falcon or hawk signifies one eager or hot in the pursuit of an object much desired.

The ducal coronet is frequently used instead of a wreath, or as a collar. It has three leaves, unless blazoned as having a greater number.

The griffin is one of the principal bearings in heraldry, but is used chiefly as a crest or supporter. This mythical creature has the head, wings and talons of an eagle, and the body of a lion. Guillim says it "sets forth the property of a valorous soldier whose magnanimity is such that he seems, where most maternal instinct is shown in childhood; and these stiff wooden half-penny dolls, exported often at the rate of sixty or seventy hundredweight the week, become transformed, on reaching England, by the touch of love.

"Then these inferior articles of trade turn into fairy princesses, who perform pirouettes in a golden light on the branches of the ragged-school Christmas trees. Then these items of debit and credit call forth the taste of some little dolls' dressmaker, as she attires them in the latest Parisian fashion.

"These dolls marry and settle down when they reach England. They dwell in houses, play the piano, receive visitors, instruct their children. They are puppets in the tiny fingers of juvenile providences who have placed them in comfortable dolls' houses.

"How many of these cheap dolls become precious indeed when lying on the pillows of the children's hospital. There they charm and soothe little sufferers, young to be tried in the furnace of affliction. Nearly all these myriads of dolls are for Great Britain.

"Those larger dolls' heads are destined for Amsterdam. But they merely rest there to receive bodies and the title of Dutch dolls. After that they resume their journey to become aunts and mothers to the lesser dolls which have already crossed the British Channel."
